2. To quarter foldiers.

They remembered him of charging the kingdom, by billeting foldiers. Raleigh.

The counties throughout the kingdom were so incensed, and their affections poisoned, that they refused to suffer the foldiers to be billeted upon them. Clarendon.

Bi'LLIARDS. n. f. without a singular. [billard, Fr. of which that language has no etymology; and therefore they probably derived from England both the play and the name, which is corrupted from bal-yards, yards or sticks with which a ball is driven along a table. Thus Spenser:

Bi'yards much unfit,
And shuttlecocks misbecoming manly wit.

Hubbard's Tale.

A game at which a ball is forced against another on the table.

Let it alone; let's to billiards. Shakespeare.

Even nose and cheek withal,
Smooth as is the billiard ball. Ben Jonson.

Some are forced to bound or fly upwards, almost like ivory balls meeting on a billiard table.

When the ball obeys the stroke of a billiard stick, it is not any action of the ball, but bare pulsion. Locke.

Bi'LLOW. n. f. [bilge, Germ. bolg. Dan.
probably of the same original with bilzg, Sax. a bladder.] A wave swollen, and hollow.

B I N

From whence the river Dee, as silver clear,
His tumbling billows rolls with gentle roar.

Spenser.
Billows sink by degrees, even when the wind is down that first stirred them. Wotton.

Chasing Nereus with his trident throws
The billows from the bottom. Denham.

To Bi'LLOW. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell, or roll, as a wave.

The billowing snow, and violence of the show'r,
That from the hills disperse their dreadful store,
And o'er the vales collected run pour. Prior.

Bi'LLOWY. adj. [from billow.] Swelling;
turgid; wavy.

And, whitening down the mossy-finctur'd stream, Defends the billows foam. Thomson.

BiN. n. f. [binne, Sax.] A place where bread, or corn, or wine, is repositied.

The most convenient way of picking hops, is into a long square frame of wood, called a bin. Mortimer.

As when, from rooting in a bin,
All powder'd o'er from tail to chin,
A lively maggot sallies out,
You know him by his hazel snout. Swift.

Bi'NARY. adj. [from binus, Lat.] Two;
dual; double.

Bi'NARY Arithmetick. A method of computation proposed by Mr. Leibnitz, in which, in lieu of the ten figures in the common arithmetick, and the progression from ten to ten, he has only two figures, and uses the simple progression from two to two. This method appears to be the same with that used by the Chinese four thousand years ago. Chambers.

To BIND. v. a. pret. bound; part. pass.
bound, or bounden. [binban, Sax.]

1. To confine with bonds; to enchain.

To faulty doubts and fears. Shakespeare.

You will sooner, by imagination, bind a bud from singing, than from eating or flying. Bacon.

Though passion be the most obvious and general, yet it is not the only cause that binds up the understanding, and confines it, for the time, to one object, from which it will not be taken off. Locke.

In such a dismal place,
Where joy ne'er enters, which the sun ne'er cheers,
Bound in with darkness, overspread with damps,
Dryden.

10. To hinder the flux of the bowels; to Unfather'd heirs, and loathly birds of nature. Shakespeare.

That poets are far rarer births than kings,
Your noblest father prov'd. Ben Jonson.

Who of themselves
Abhor to join; and, by imprudence mix'd, Produce prodigious births of body or mind. Milt.

She, for this many thousand years,
Seems to have practis'd with much care
To frame the race of woman fair;
Yet never could a perfect birth
Produce before, to grace the earth. Haller.

His eldest birth
Flies, mark'd by heav'n, a fugitive o'er earth. Pope.

The vallis smile, and with their flow'ry face,
And wealthy births, confess the flood's embrace. Bacon.

Others hatch their eggs, and tend the birth, till it is able to shift for itself. Addison.

6. The act of bringing forth.

That fair Syrian shepherdess
Who, after years of banishment,
The highly favour'd Joseph bore
To him that serv'd for her before;
And at her next birth, much like thee,
Through pangs led to felicity. Milton.

7. The seamen call a due or proper distance between ships lying at an anchor, or under sail, a birth. Also the proper place on board for the masts to put their chests, &c. is called the birth of that mast. Also a convenient place to moor a ship in, is called a birth. Harris.

1. The day on which any one is born.

Exhaling first from darkness, they beheld Birth-day of heaven and earth. Milton.

2. The day of the year in which any one was born, annually observed.

This is my birthday; as this very day
Was Caius born. Shakspeare.

They tell me 'tis my birthday, and I'll keep it
With double pomp of sadness:
'Tis what the day deserves which gave me breath. Dryden.

Your country dames,
Whose cloaths returning birth-day cloms. Prior.

BI'RTHDOM. n. f. [This is erroneously, I think, printed in Shakspeare, birthdom. It is derived from birth and dom (see Dom.) as kingdom, dukedom.] Privilege of birth.

Let us rather
Hold fast the mortal sword; and, like good men, Beside our down-fall birthdom. Shakspeare.

BI'RTHNIGHT. n. f. [from birth and night.]

1. The night on which any one is born.

Th' angelick song in Bethlehem field,

Against my fire.

Such smiling rogues as these,
Like rats, oft bite the holy cords in twain,
Too intricate to unloose.

These are the youths that thunder at a play-house, and fight for bitten apples.
He falls; his arms upon his body found,
And with his bloody teeth he bites the ground.

There was lately a young gentleman bite to the bone, who is now indeed recovered.

Then foul mouths have not opened their lips without a falsity; though they have showed their teeth as if they would bite off my nose.

2. To give pain by cold.

Here feel we the icy phang,
And churlish chiding, of the winter's wind;
Which when it bites and blows upon my body.
Even till I shiver with cold, I smile.
Full fifty years, harnessed in rugged steel,
I have endur'd the biting winter's blast,
And the feverish heats of parching summer.

3. To hurt or pain with reproach.

Each poet with a different talent writes;
One praises, one instructs, another bites.

4. To cut; to wound.

I have seen the day, with my good biting fault-chion
I would have made them skip.

5. To make the mouth smart with an acrid taste.

It may be the first water will have more of the scent, as more fragrant; and the second more of the taste, as more bitter, or biting.

6. To cheat; to trick; to defraud: a low phrase.

Asleep and naked as an Indian lay,
An honest factor stole a gem away:
He plied it to the knight; the knight had wit,
So kept the diamond, and the rogue was bit.

If you had allowed half the fine gentlemen to have converted with you, they would have been strangely bit, while they thought only to fall in love with a fair lady.

BIT

BITER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The seizure of any thing by the teeth.

Does he think he can endure the everlasting burnings, or arm himself against the bites of the never-dying worm?

Nor dog-days parching heat, that splits the rocks,
Is half so harmful as the greedy flocks,
Their venom'd bite, and fangs indented on the flocks.

2. The act of a fish that takes the bait.

I have known a very good fisher angle diligently four or six hours for a river carp, and not have a bite.

3. A cheat; a trick; a fraud: in low and vulgar language.

Let a man be ne'er to wife,
He may be caught with slyer lies;
For, take it in its proper light,
'Tis just what Coxcombs call a bite.

4. A sharper; one who commits frauds.

BITER. n. f. [from bite.]

1. He that bites.

Great barkers are no *biter*s.

2. A fish apt to take the bait.

He is so bold, that he will invade one of his own kind; and you may therefore easily believe him to be a bold biter.

3. A tricker; a deceiver.

A biter is one who tells you a thing you have no reason to disbelieve in itself, and perhaps has given you, before he bit you, no reason to disbelieve it for his saying it; and, if you give him credit, laughs in your face, and triumphs that he has deceived you. He is one who thinks you a fool, because you do not think him a knave.

BITTACLE. n. f. A frame of timber in the sterage of a ship, where the compass is placed.

BITTEN. The part. pass. of To bite.

BITTER. adj. [brecan, Saxon.]

1. Having a hot, acrid, biting taste, like wormwood.

Bitter things are apt rather to kill than engender putrefaction.

Though a man in a fever should, from sugar, have a bitter taste, which, at another time, produces a sweet one; yet the idea of bitter, in that man's mind, would be as distinct from the idea of sweet, as if he had tasted only gall.

2. Sharp; cruel; severe.

Friends now fast sown,
Unseparable, shall within this hour,
On a dissolution of a dot, break out
To bitter enmity.
Husbands, love your wives, and be not bitter against them.
The word of God, instead of a bitter, teaches us a charitable zeal.

3. Calamitous; miserable.

Noble friends and fellows, whom to leave
Is only bitter to me, only dying;
Go with me, like good angels, to my end.
A dire induction am I witness to;
And will to France, hoping the consequence
Will prove as bitter, black, and tragical.
And thence the bitter consequence: for know
The day thou eat'st thereof, my sole command
Transgress, inevitably thou shalt die.
Tell him, that if I bear my bitter fate,
'Tis to behold his vengeance for my son.

4. Painful; inclement.

The fowl the borders fly,
And thence the bitter blast, and wheel about the sky.

5. Sharp; reproachful; satirical.

To BLAB. v. a. [blabberen, Dutch.]

1. To tell what ought to be kept secret: it usually implies rather thoughtlessness than treachery; but may be used in either sense.

The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day
Is crept into the bosom of the sea. Shakspeare.

Thy dares be done, and none left out,
Ere the blabbing eastern fount,
The nice morn on the Indian steep,
From her cabin'd loophole peep. Milton.

Nature has made man's breasts no windores,
To publish what he does within doors;
Nor what dark secrets there inhabit,
Unless his own rash folly blab it. Hudibras.

Sorrow nor joy can be disguis'd by art,
Our foreheads blab the secrets of our heart. Dryd.

It is unlawful to give any kind of religious worship to a creature; but the very indices of the fathers cannot escape the index expurgatorius, for blabbing to great a truth. Stillingfleet.

Nor whisper to the tattling reeds
Thou blackest of all female decds;

B L A

Nor blab it on the lonely rocks,
Where echo sits, and list'ning mocks. Swift.

BLA'DDER-NUT. n. f. [Staphyloendron, Lat.] A plant.

BLADDER-SENA. n. f. [Colutea, Lat.] A plant.

BLADE. n. f. [blæd, bled, Sax. bled, Fr.]

The spire of grass before it grows to seed; the green shoots of corn which rise from the seed. This seems to me the primitive signification of the word blade; from which, I believe, the blade of a sword was first named, because of its similitude in shape; and, from the blade of a sword, that of other weapons or tools.

There is hardly found a plant that yieldeth a red juice in the blade or ear, except it be the tree that beareth junguis draconis. Bacon.

Send in the feeding flocks betimes t' invade

The rising bulk of the luxuriant blade. Dryden.

If we were able to dive into her secret recesses,

we should find that the smallest blade of grass, or most contemptible weed, has its particular use. Swift.

Hung on every spray, on every blade

Of grass, the myriads dewdrops twinkle round. Thomson.

BLADE. n. f. [blatte, Germ. blad, Dutch.]

1. The sharp or striking part of a weapon or instrument, distinct from the handle.

It is usually taken for a weapon, and so called probably from the likeness of a sword blade to a blade of grass. It is commonly applied to the knife.

He fought all round about, his thirsty blade

To bathe in blood of faithless enemy. F. Queen.

She knew the virtue of her blade, nor would Pollute her labre with ignoble blood. Dryden.

Be his this sword, whose blade of brass displays

A ready gleam, whose hilt a silver blade. Pope.

2. A brisk man, either fierce or gay, called so in contempt. So we say mettle for courage.

You'll find yourself mistaken, sir, if you'll take upon you to judge of these blades by their garbs, looks, and outward appearance. L'Ft strange.

Then turning about to the hangman, he said,

Dispatch me, I prithee, this troublesome blade. Prior.

BLADE of the shoulder. } n. f. The bone

BLADFBONE. } called by anat-

Sow all th' Athenian bosoms, and the crop

Be general leprosy. Shakespeare.

Borches and blains must all his flesh imbals,

And all his people. Milton.

Whene'er I had a rival nam'd,

I feel my body all inflam'd,

Which breaking out in boils and blains,

With yellow filth my linen stains. Swift.

BLA'MABLE. adj. [from blame.] Culpable; faulty.

Virtue is placed between two extremes, which are on both sides equally blamable. Dryden.

BLA'MABLENESS. n. f. [from blamable.]

Fault; the state of being liable to blame; culpableness; faultiness.

BLA'MABLY. adv. [from blamable.] Cul-pably; in a manner liable to censure.

A process may be carried on against a person, that is maliciously or blamably absent, even to a definitive sentence. Ayliffe.

To BLAME. v. a. [blamer, Fr.]

1. To censure; to charge with a fault: it generally implies a slight censure.

Our pow'r

Shall do a court'ry to our wrath, which men

May blame, but not controul. Shakespeare.

Porphyrius, you too far did tempt your fate;

'Tis true, your duty to me it became;

But, praising that, I must your conduct blame. Dryden.

Each finding, like a friend,

Something to blame, and something to commend. Pope.

2. To blame has usually the particle for before the fault.

here all along of the word sentiment. Locke.

3. Sometimes, but rarely, of.

Tomorrow he blamed of inconsiderate rashness, for that he would busy himself in matters not belonging to his vocation. Knolles' History of the Turks.

BLAME. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Imputation of a fault.

In arms the praise of success is shared among many: yet the blame of misadventures is charged upon one. Hayward.

They lay the blame on the poor little ones, sometimes passionately enough, to divert it from themselves. Locke.

2. Crime; that which produces or deserves censure.

Who would not judge us to be discharged of all blame, which are confess'd to have no great fault, even by their very word and testimony, in whose eyes no fault of ours hath ever hitherto been accustomed to seem small. Hooker.

I unspeak mine own detraction; here abjure

The taints and blames I laid upon myself,

For strangers to my nature. Shakespeare.

3. Hurt. Not in use.

Therewith upon his crest

With rigour so outrageous he smit,

That a large share it bow'd out of the rest,

And glancing down his shield, from blame him

4. There is a peculiar structure of this word, in which it is not very evident

whether it be a noun or a verb, but I conceive it to be the noun. To blame, in French a tort; culpable; worthy of censure.

You were to blame, I must be plain with you

To part so slightly with your wife's first gift. Shakespeare.

B I A

I do not ask whether they were misaken; but, whether they were to blame in the manner.

Now we should hold them much to blame,
If they went back before they came. Prior.
BLAMEFUL. adj. [from blame and full.]
Criminal; guilty; meriting blame.
Is not the cause of these tumults deaths
As blameful as the executioner? Shakspere.
Bluntwitted lord, ignoble in demeanour,
If ever lady wrong'd her lord so much,
Thy mother took into her blameful bed
Some stern untutor'd churl. Shakspere.
BLAMELESSLY. adv. [from blameless.] Innocently; without crime.

It is the wilful opposing explicit articles, and not the not believing them when not revealed, or not with that conviction, against which he cannot blamelessly, without pertinacity, hold out, that will bring danger of ruin on any. Hammond.

BLAMELESSNESS. n. f. [from blameless.]
Innocence; exemption from censure.
Having intolved with him in Homer, that all is chargeable on Jupiter and fate, they infer, with him, the blamelessness of the inferior agent. Hammond.

BLAMELESS. adj. [from blame.]
1. Guiltless; innocent; exempt from censure or blame.

She found out the righteous, and preserved him blameless unto God. Wisdom.

That love, alas! can ne'er be cur'd;
A complicated heap of ills,
Detesting boluses and pills. Swift.

BOMB. n. f. [bombus, Lat.]

1. A loud noise.
An upper chamber being thought weak, was supported by a pillar of iron, of the bigness of one's arm in the midst; which, if you had struck, would make a little flat noise in the room, but a great bomb in the chamber beneath. Bacon.

2. A hollow iron ball, or shell, filled with gunpowder, and furnished with a vent for a fusee, or wooden tube filled with combustible matter, to be thrown out from a mortar, which had its name from the noise it makes. The fusee, being set on fire, burns slowly till it reaches the gunpowder, which goes off at once, bursting the shell to pieces with incredible violence; whence the use of bombs in besieging towns. The largest are about eighteen inches in diameter. By whom they were invented is not known, and the time is uncertain; some fixing it to 1588, and others to 1495. Chambers.

though it is not so exposed as formerly. Adison.

BOMBASIN. n. f. [bombasin, Fr. from bombycinus, silken, Latin.] A light silken stuff, for mourning.

BOMBAST. n. f. [A stuff of soft loose texture used formerly to swell the garment, and thence used to signify bulk or show without solidity.] Fustian;
big words, without meaning.

Not pedants motley tongue, soldiers bombast,
Mountebanks drug-tongue, nor the terms of law,
Are strong enough preparatives to draw
Me to hear this. Donne.

Are all the flights of heroic poetry to be concluded bombast, unnatural, and mere madness, because they are not affected with their excellencies? Dryden.

Bo'MBAST. adj. [from the substantive.] High founding; of big sound without meaning.

He, as loving his own pride and purpose,
Evades them with a bombast circumstance,
Horribly stuff'd with epithets of war. Shaksp.

BOMBILATION. n. f. [from bombus, Lat.]
Sound; noise; report.

How to abate the vigour, or silence the bom-bilation of guns, a way is said to be by borax and butter, mixt in a due proportion, which will almost take off the report, and also the force of the charge. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

BOMBYCINOUS. adj. [bombycinus, Lat.]
Silken; made of silk.

B O N

BONA ROBA. n. f. [Ital. a fine gown.] A showy wanton.

We knew where the bona robas were. Shaksp.
BONASUS. n. f. [Lat.] A kind of buffalo, or wild bull.

BONCHRETIEN. n. f. [French.] A species of pear, so called, probably, from the name of a gardener.

BOND. n. f. [bond, Sax. bundu]; it is written indifferently, in many of its senses, bond, or band. See BAND.

1. Cords, or chains, with which any one is bound.

There left me, and my man, both bound together;

Till, gnawing with my teeth my bonds asunder, I gain'd my freedom. Shaksp.

2. Ligament that holds any thing together. Let any one fend his contemplation to the extremities of the universe, and see what conceivable hoops, what bond he can imagine, to hold this mass of matter in so close a pressure together. Locke.

3. Union; connexion: a workman's term.

Observe, in working up the walls, that no side of the house, nor any part of the walls, be brought up three feet above the other, before the next adjoining wall be wrought up to it, so that they may all be joined together, and make a good bond. Mortimer's Husbandry.

4. [In the plural.] Chains; imprisonment; captivity.

Whom I perceived to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death, or of bonds. Acts.

5. Cement of union; cause of union; link of connexion.

Wedding is great Juno's crown;
O blessed bond of board and bed! Shaksp.

Love cools, brothers divide, and the bond is cracked 'twixt son and father. Shaksp.

6. A writing of obligation to pay a sum, or perform a contract.

Go with me to a notary, seal me there
Your single bond. Shaksp.

What if I ne'er consent to make you mine;
My father's promise ties me not to time;
And bonds without a date, they say, are void. Dryden.

7. Obligation; law by which any man is obliged.

Unhappy that I am! I cannot heave
My heart into my mouth: I love your majesty
According to my bond, no more nor less. Shaksp.

Take which you please, it dissolves the bonds of government and obedience. Locke.

BOND. adj. [from bind, perhaps for bound; from gebonden, Saxon.] Captive; in a servile state.

Whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free. 1 Corinthians.

BO'NDAGE. n. f. [from bond.]

1. Captivity; imprisonment; state of restraint.

You only have overthrown me, and in my bondage consists my glory. Sidney.

Say, gentle prince, would you not suppose
Your bondage happy, to be made a queen?

—To be a queen in bondage, is more vile
Than is a slave in base servility. Shaksp.

Our cage
We make a choir, as doth the prison'd bird,
And sing our bondage freely. Shaksp.

The king, when he design'd you for my guard,
Relov'd he would not make my bondage hard. Dryden.

2. Obligation; tie of duty.

If he has a struggle for honour, she is in a bondage to love; which gives the story its turn that way. Pope.

He must resolve by no means to be enslaved, and brought under the bondage of obeying oaths, which ought to vanish when they stand in competition with eating and drinking, or taking money. South.

BO'NDMAID. n. f. [from bond, captive, and maid.] A woman slave.

Good filter, wrong me not, nor wrong yourself,
To make a bondmaid and a slave of me. Shaksp.

BO'NDMAN. n. f. [from bond and man.] A man slave.

Among the Romans, in making of a bondman free, was it not wondered wherefore so great ado should be made? the matter to present his slave in some court, to take him by the hand, and not only to say, in the hearing of the public magistrate, I will that this man become free; but, after those solemn words uttered, to strike him on the cheek, to turn him round, the hair of his head to be shaved off, the magistrate to touch him thrice with a rod; in the end, a cap and a white garment given him. Hooker.

O freedom! first delight of human kind;
Not that which bondmen from their masters find. Dryden.

BONDSE'RVANT. n. f. [from bond and servant.] A slave; a servant without the liberty of quitting his master.

And if thy brother, that dwelleth by thee, be waxed poor, and be sold unto thee, thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bondservant. Leviticus.

BONDSE'RVICE. n. f. [from bond and service.] The condition of a bondservant; slavery.

Upon these did Solomon levy a tribute of bondservice. King.

BO'NDSLAVE. n. f. [from bond and slave.]

A man in slavery; one of servile condition, who cannot change his master.

Love enjoined such diligence, that no apprentice,
no, no bondslave, could ever be, by fear, more ready at all commands than that young prince's was. Sidney.

All her ornaments are taken away; of a free-woman she is become a bondslave. 1 Marc.

Commonly the bondslave is fed by his lord,
but here the lord was fed by his bondslave. Sir J. Davies.

BO'NDSMAN. n. f. [from bond and man.]

1. A slave.

Carnal greedy people, without such a precept, would have no mercy upon their poor bondsmen
and beasts. Derham.

2. A person bound, or giving security, for another.

BO'NDSWOMAN. n. f. [from bond and woman.] A woman slave.

My lords, the senators
Are sold for slaves, and their wives for bondswomen. Ben Jonson's Cataline.

BONE. n. f. [ban, Saxon.]

1. The solid part of the body of an animal.

The bones are made up of hard fibres, tied one to another by small transverse fibres, as those of the muscles. In a fetus they are porous, soft, and easily discerned. As their pores fill with a substance of their own nature, so they increase, harden, and grow close to one another. They are all spongy, and full of little cells; or are of a considerable firm thickness, with a large cavity, except the teeth; and where they are articulated,
they are covered with a thin and strong membrane, called the periosteum. Each bone is much bigger at its extremity than in the middle, that the articu-lations might be firm, and the bones not easily put out of joint. But, because the middle of the bone should be strong, to sustain its allotted weight, and resist accidents, the fibres are there more closely compacted together, supporting one another; and the bone is made hollow, and consequently not so easily broken, as it must have been had it been solid and smaller. Quincy.

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold. Macbeth.

B O N

There was lately a young gentleman bit to the bone. Tatler.

2. A fragment of meat; a bone with as much flesh as adheres to it.

Like Asop's hounds contending for the bone,
Each pleaded right, and would be lord alone. Dryden.

3. To be upon the bones. To attack.
Puis had a month's mind to be upon the bones of him, but was not willing to pick a quarrel. L'Estrange.

4. To make no bones. To make no scruple:
a metaphor taken from a dog, who readily swallows meat that has no bones.

5. Bones. A sort of bobbins, made of trotter bones, for weaving bonelace.

6. Bones. Dice.

But then my study was to cog the dice,
And dextrously to throw the lucky see.
To shun ames ace, that swept my stakes away;
And watch the box, for fear they should convey False bones, and put upon me in the play. Dryd.

To BONE. v. a. [from the noun.] To take out the bones from the flesh; as,
the cook boned the veal.

BO'NELACE. n. f. [from bone and lace; the bobbins with which lace is woven being frequently made of bones.] Flaxen lace, such as women wear on their linen.

The things you follow, and make songs on now, should be sent to knit, or sit down to bobbins or bonelace. Tatler.

We destroy the symmetry of the human figure, and foolishly contrive to call off the eye from great and real beauties, to childish gewgaw rib-bands and bonelace. Speator.

BO'NELESS. adj. [from bone.] Wanting bones.

I would, while it was smiling in my face,
Have plucked my nipple from his boneless gums,
And dash the brains out. Shaksp.

To BO'NESET. v. n. [from bone and set.]

To restore a bone out of joint to its place; or join a bone broken to the other part.

A fractured leg set in the country by one pretending to bone-setting. Wise man's Surgery.

BO'NESETTER. n. f. [from bone-set.] A chirurgian; one who particularly professes the art of restoring broken or luxated bones.

At present my desire is to have a good bone-setter. Denham.

BO'NFIRE. n. f. [from bon, good, Fr.
and fire.] A fire made for some publick cause of triumph or exultation.

Ring ye the bells to make it wear away,
And bonfires make all the day. Spenser.

How came so many bonfires to be made in queen Mary's days? Why, she had abused and deceived her people. South.

Full soon by bonfire and by bell,
We learnt our liege was passing well. Gay.

BO'NGRACE. n. f. [bonne grace, Fr.] A forehead-cloth, or covering for the forehead. Not used.

I have seen her better all over with emeralds and pearls, ranged in rows about her ears, her petuque, her bongrace, and chaplet. Hakewill.

BO'NNET. n. f. [bonnet, Fr.] A covering for the head; a hat; a cap.

Go to them with this bonnet in thy hand,
And thus far having stretch'd it, here be with them.

Thy knee huffing the stones; for, in such business,
Action is eloquence. Shaksp.

They had not probably the ceremony of valing
the bonnet in their salutations; for, in medals, they still have it on their heads. Adison.

BOO

BO'NNET. [In fortification.] A kind of little ravelin, without any ditch, having a parapet three feet high, anciently placed before the points of the salient angles of the glacis.

BO'NNET à prestre, or priest's cap, is an outwork, having at the head three salient angles, and two inwards.

BO'NNETS. [In the sea language.] Small sails set on the courses on the mizzen, mainfail, and forefail of a ship, when there are too narrow or shallow to clothe the mast, or in order to make more way in calm weather. Chambers.

BO'NNILY. adv. [from bonny.] Gayly; handsomely; plumply.

BO'NNINESS. n. f. [from bonny.] Gayety; handfomeneſs; plumpneſs.

BO'NNY. adj. [from bon, bonne, Fr.] It is a word now almost confined to the Scottish dialect.

1. Handsome; beautiful.
Match to match I have encountered him,
And made a prey for carion kites and crows,
Ev'n of the bonny heart he lov'd so well. Shaksp.
Thus wall'd the louts in melancholy strain,
Till bonny Susan sped across the plain. Gay.

2. Gay; merry; frolicksome; cheerful; blithe.
Then sigh not so, but let them go,
And be you blithe and bonny. Shaksp.

3. It seems to be generally used in conversation for plump.

BONNY-CLABBER. n. f. A word used in Ireland for four buttermilk.
We scorn, for want of talk, to jabber
Of parties o'er our bonny-clabber;
Nor are we studious to enquire,
Who votes for manors, who for hire. Swift.

BONUM MAGNUM. n. f. A species of plum.

BO'NY. adj. [from bone.]

1. Consisting of bones.
At the end of this bone is a membrane, fastened to a round bone limb, and stretched like the head of a drum; and therefore, by anatomists, called tympanium. Ray.

2. Full of bones.

BO'BY. n. f. [a word of no certain etymology. Henshaw thinks it a corruption of bull-beef, ridiculously; Skinner imagines it to be derived from boba, foolish, Spanish. Junius finds bowbard, to be an old Scottish word for a coward, a contemptible fellow; from which he naturally deduces booby; but the original of bowbard is not known.] A dull, heavy, stupid fellow; a lubber.
But one exception to this last we find;
That booby Phaon only was unkind,
An ill-luck'd boatman, rough as waves and wind. Prior.

Young master next must rise to fill him wine,
And flatter himself to see the booby dine. K. r. p.

BOOK. n. f. [hoc, Sax. supposed from bot, a beech, because they wrote on beechen boards; as liber, in Latin, from the rind of a tree.]

1. A volume in which we read or write.
See a book of prayer in his hand;
True ornaments to know a holy man. Shaksp.
Receive the sentence of the law for sins,
Such as by God's book are adjudg'd to death. Shaksp.

In the coffin that had the books, they were found as fresh as if they had been but newly written;

being written on parchment, and covered over with wax candles of wax. Bacon.

Books are a sort of dumb teachers; they cannot answer sudden questions, or explain present doubts: this is properly the work of a living instructor. Harris.

2. A particular part of a work.

The first book we divide into sections; where of the first is these chapters put. Burnet's Theory

3. The register in which a trader keeps an account of his debts.

This lie
Is nobler than attending for a bauble;
Prouder than rustling in unpaid-for silk;
Such gain the cap of him that makes them fine,
Yet keeps his book uncleanly'd. Shaksp.

4. In books. In kind remembrance.

I was so much in his books, that, at his decease, he left me the lamp by which he used to write his lucubrations. Addison.

5. Without book. By memory; by repetition; without reading.

Sermons read they abhor in the church; but sermons without book, sermons which spend their life in their birth, and may have public audience but once. Hooks.

TO BOOK. v. a. [from the noun.] To register in a book.

I beseech your grace, let it be booked with the rest of this day's deeds; or I will have it in a particular ballad else, with mine own picture on the top of it. Shaksp.

He made wilful murder high treason; he caused the marchers to book their men, for whom they should make answer. Davies on Ireland

BO'OK-KEEPING. n. f. [from book and keep.] The art of keeping accounts, or recording pecuniary transactions, in such a manner, that at any time a man may thereby know the true state of the whole, or any part of his affairs, with clearness and expedition. Harris.

BO'OKBINDER. n. f. [from book and bind.] A man whose profession it is to cover books.

BO'OKFUL. adj. [from book and full.] Full of notions gleaned from books; crowded with undigested knowledge.

The bookful blockhead, ignorantly read,
With loads of learned lumber in his head,
With his own tongue still edifies his ears,
And always hitting to himself appears. Pope.

BO'OKISH. adj. [from book.] Given to books; acquainted only with books. It is generally used contemptuously.

I'll make him yield the crown,
Whose bookish rule hath pull'd fair England down. Shaksp.

I'm not bookish, yet I can read waiting-gentlewoman in the 'scape. Shaksp. Winter Tale.
Xantippe follows her name like; being married to a bookish man, who has no knowledge of the world. Spectator.

BO'OKISHNESS. n. f. [from bookish.] Much application to books; over-studiousness.

BOOKLEARNED. adj. [from book and learned.] Versed in books, or literature: a term implying some slight contempt.

Whate'er these booklearn'd blockheads say,
Solon's the veriest fool in all the play. Dryden
He will quote passages out of Plato and Pindar, at his own table, to some booklearned companion, with out blushing. Swift.

BOOKLEARNING. n. f. [from book and learning.] Skill in literature; acquaintance with books: a term of some contempt.

They might talk of booklearning what they would, but he never saw more uncivil fellows than great clerks. Steele.

Neither does it so much require booklearning and scholarship, as good natural sense, to distinguish true and false, and to discern what is well proved, and what is not. Burnet's Theory.

BO'OKMAN. n. f. [from book and man.] A man whose profession is the study of books.

This civil war of wits were much better us'd
On Navarre and his bookmen; for here 'tis allis'd. Shaksp.

BO'OKMATE. n. f. [from book and mate.] Schoolfellow.

This Armado is a Spaniard that keeps here in court,
A phantasm, a monarch, and one that makes sport
To the prince and his bookmates. Shaksp.

BO'OKSELLER. n. f. [from book and sell.] He whose profession it is to sell books.

He went to the bookseller, and told him in anger, he had sold a book in which there was false divinity. Harris.

BO'OKWORM. n. f. [from book and worm.] 1. A worm or mite that eats holes in books, chiefly when damp.

My lion, like a moth or bookworm, feeds up nothing but paper, and I shall beg of them to do him with wholesome and substantial food. G. r.

2. A student too closely given to books; a reader without judgment.

Among those venerable galleries and solemn scenes of the university, I wanted but a black gown, and a salary, to be as mere a bookworm any there. Pope's Letter.

BO'OLY. n. f. [An Irish term.]

All the Boolitians, and the people about the Caspian Sea, which are naturally Boolitians, are in hordes; being the very same that the Irish booles are, driving their cattle with them, and feeding only on their milk and white meats. Pepys.

BOOM. n. f. [from boom, a tree, Dutch.]

1. [In sea language.] A long pole used to spread out the clue of the fludding sale; and sometimes the clues of the mainfail and forefail are boomed out.

2. A pole with buthes or baskets, set up as a mark to show the sailors how to steer in the channel, when a country is overflown. Sea Dictionary.

3. A bar of wood laid across a harbour to keep off the enemy.

As his heroick worth struck envy dumb,
Who took the Dutchman and who cut the boom. Dryden.

TO BOOM. v. n. [from the noun. A seaterm.]

1. To rush with violence; as a ship is said to come booming, when she makes all the sail she can. Did.

2. To swell and fall together.

Booming o'er his head
The billows clos'd; he's number'd with the dead. Young.

Forsook by thee, in vain I fought thy aid,

BOON. n. f. [from bene, Sax. a petition.]

A gift; a grant; a benefaction; a present.

Vouchsafe me for my meed but one fair look
A smaller boon than this I cannot beg,
And less than this, I'm sure, you cannot give. Shaksp.

That courtier, who obtained a boon of the emperor, that he might every morning whisper him in the ear, and say nothing, asked no unprofitable suit for himself. Bacon.

The bluffing fool has satisfy'd his will;
His boon is given; his knight has gain'd the day,
But lost the prize. Dryden's Fables.

What rhetoric didst thou use
To gain this mighty boon? she pities me! Addis.
BOON. adj. [bon, Fr.] Gay; merry; as,
a boon companion.

Samate at length,
And brighten'd as with wine, jocund and boon
Thus to himself the pleasingly began. Par. Lost.
I know the infirmity of our family; we play the boon companion, and throw out money away in our cups. Arbutnot.

BOOR. n. f. [beer, Dutch; gebuer, Sax.] A ploughman; a country fellow;
a lout; a clown.

The bare sense of a calamity is cilled gumblung; and if a man does but make a face upon the boor, he is presently a malecontent. L'Estrange.

He may live as well as a boor of Holland, whose cares of growing still richer waste his life. Temple.

To one well-born, th' affront is worse and more,
When he's abus'd and buffed by a boor. Dryden.
BOORISH. adj. [from boor] Clownish;
rustick; untaught; uncivilized.

Therefore, you clown, abandon, which is, in the vulgar, leave the society, which, in the boorish, is company of this female. Shakspeare.

BOORISHLY. adv. [from boorish.] In a boorish manner; after a clownish manner.

BOORISHNESS. n. f. [from boorish.] Clown-ishness; rusticity; coarseness of manners.

BOOSE. n. f. [boijs, Sax.] A stall for a cow or an ox.

To BOOT. v. a. [baten, to profit, Dutch;
bot, in Saxon, is recompence, repentance, or fine paid by way of expiation;
botan is, to repent, or to compensate; as,
He is pij-ph bot and bore,
And bet bivonen come.]

To profit; to advantage: it is commonly used in these modes, it boots, or what boots it.

It shall not boot them, who derogate from reading; to excuse it, when they see no other remedy; as if their intent were only to deny that aliens and strangers from the family of God are wily, or that belief doth use to be wrought at the first in them without sermons. Hooker.

For what I have, I need not to repeat;
And what I want, it boots not to complain. Shakf.

If we shun
The purpos'd end, or here lie, fixed all,
What boots it us these wars to have begun? Fairfax.

What boots the regal circle on his head,
That long behind he trails his pompous robe? Pope.

2. To enrich; to benefit.

And I will boot thee with what gift beside,
That modesty can beg. Shakf. Ant. and Cleop.

BOOT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Profit; gain; advantage; something given to mend the exchange.

My gravity
Wherein let no man hear me, I take pride,
Could I, with boot, change for an idle plume,
Which the air beats for vain. Shakspeare.

2. To boot. With advantage; over and above; besides.

Canst thou, O partial sleep, give thy repose
To the wet seaboy, in an hour to ride;
And, in the calmest and the stillest night,
With all appliances and means to boot,
Deny it to a king? Shakspeare.

Man is God's image; but a poor man is Christ's stamp to lost: both images regard. Herbert.

He might have his mind and manners formed,
and be instructed to boot in several sciences. Locke.

3. It seems, in the following lines, used for booty, or plunder.

Others, like soldiers, armed in their slings,
Make boot upon the summer's velvet buds. Shakf.

BOOT. n. f. [bottas, Armorick; boies, a shoe, Welsh; botte, French.]

1. A covering for the leg, used by horsemen.

That my leg is too long—

—No; that it is too little.—

I'll wear a boot to make it somewhat rounder. Shakspeare.

Shew'd him his room, where he must lodge that night,
Pull'd off his boots, and took away the light. Mit.

Bishop Wilkins says, he does not question but it will be as usual for a man to call for his wings, when he is going a journey, as it is now to call for his boots. Addison's Guardian.

2. A kind of rack for the leg, formerly used in Scotland for torturing criminals.

BOOT of a coach. The space between the coachman and the coach.

To BOOT. v. a. [from the noun.] To put on boots.

Best, boot, master Shallow; I know the young king is sick for me: let us take any man's horses Shakspeare.

BOOT-HOSE. n. f. [from boot and hose.]
Stockings to serve for boots; spatter-dashies.

His lacquey with a linen stock on one leg, and a boot-hose on the other, gartered with a red and I blue list. Shakspeare.

BOOT-TREE. n. f. [from boot and tree.]
Two pieces of wood, shaped like a leg, to be driven into boots, for stretching and widening them.

BOOTCATCHER. n. f. [from boot and catch.] The person whose business at an inn is to pull off the boots of passengers.

The ostler and the bootcatcher ought to partake Sweet.

BO'OTED. adj. [from boot.] In boots; in a horseman's habit.

A booted judge shall sit to try his cause,
Not by the statute, but by martial laws. Dryden.

BOOTH. n. f. [boed, Dutch; broth, Welsh.] A house built of boards, or boughs, to be used for a short time.

The clothiers found means to have all the quest made of the northern men, such as had their booths in the fair. Camden.

Much mischief will be done at Bartholomew fair by the fall of a booth. Swift.

BO'OTLESS. adj. [from boot.]

1. Useless; unprofitable; unavailing; without advantage.

When those accursed messengers of hell
Came to their wicked man, and 'gan to tell
Their bootless pains and ill succeeding night. Spenser.

God did not suffer him, being desirous of the light of wisdom, with bootless expense of travel to wander in darkness. Hooker.

Bootless speed,
When cowardice pursues, and valour flies. Shakf.

Let him alone;
I'll follow him no more with bootless pray'rs:
He seeks my life. Shakspeare.

2. Without success.

Doth not Brutus bootless kneel? Shakspeare.
Thrice from the banks of Wye,
And sandy bottom'd Severn, have I sent Him bootless home, and weather beaten back. Shakspeare.

BO'OTY. n. f. [buys, Dutch; butin, Fr.]

1. Plunder; pillage; spoils gained from the enemy.

One way a band select from forage drives
A herd of bees, fair oxen, and fair kine,
Their booty. Milton.

His inference is the hue and cry that purposes him; and when he reckons that he has gotten a booty, he has only caught a Tartar. L'Estrange.

For, should you to extortion be inclin'd
Your cruel guilt will little booty find. Dryden.

2. Things gotten by robbery.

It I had a mind to be honest, I see fortune would not suffer me; she drops booties in my mouth. Shakspeare.

3. To play booty. To play dishonestly, with an intent to lose. The French use, Je suis botté, when they mean to say, I will not go.

We understand what we ought to do; but when we deliberate, we play booty against ourselves: our consciences direct us one way, our corruptions hurry us another. L'Estrange.

I have set this argument in the best light, that the ladies may not think that I write booty. Dryden.

BRA'MBLE. n. f. [brennaly, Sax. rubus, Lat.]

1. The blackberry bush; the raspberry bush, or hindberry.

Miller.

Content with food which nature freely beed,
On wildings and on strawberries they fed:
Cornels and bramble berries gave the rest,
And falling acorns furnish'd out a feast.

Dryden.

2. It is taken, in popular language, for any rough prickly shrub.

The bush my bed, the bramble was my bow'r,
The woods can witness many a woful store.

Sperfer.

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all forsooth, desisting the name of Rosalind.

Shakespeare.

Thy younglings, Cuddy, are but just awake,
No thistles shall the brambles bush forsake.

Gay.

BRA'MBLING. n. f. A bird, called also a mountain chaffinch.

DiD.

BRAN. n. f. [brenna, Ital.] The hulks
of corn ground; the refuse of the sieve.

From me do back receive the flow'r of all,
And leave me but the bran.

Shakespeare.

The citizens were driven to great distress for want of victuals; bread they made of the coarser bran, moulded in cloths; for otherwise it would not cleave together.

Howard.

In the sifting of fourteen years of power and savour, all that came out could not be pure meat, but must have among it a certain mixture of peas and bran, in this lower age of human fragility.

Watson.

Then water him, and drinking what he can,
Encourage him to thrust again with bran.

Dryden.

BRANCH. n. f. [branche, French.]

1. The shoot of a tree from one of the main boughs.

Why grow the branches, when the root is gone?
Why wither not the leaves that want their sap?

Shakespeare.

2. Any member or part of the whole; any distinct article; any section or subdivision.

Your oaths are past, and now subscribe your names,

That his own mind may strike his honour down,
That violates the smallest branch herein.

Shakespeare.

The belief of this was of special importance, to confirm our hopes of another life, on which so many branches of christian piety do immediately depend.

Hammond.

In the several branches of justice and charity, comprehended in those general rules, of loving our neighbour as ourselves, and of doing to others as we would have them do to us, there is nothing but what is most fit and reasonable.

Tillotson.

This precept will oblige us to perform our duty, according to the nature of the various branches of it.

Rever.

3. Any part that shoots out from the rest.

And his branches shall come out of the sides of it; three branches of the candlestick out of the one side, and three branches of the candlestick out of the other side.

Exodus.

His blood, which disperseth itself by the branches of veins, may be resembled to waters carried by brooks.

Raleigh.

4. A smaller river running into, or proceeding from, a larger.

It, from a main river, any branch be separated and divided, then, where that branch doth first bound itself with new banks, there is that part of the river, where the branch forthleth the main stream, called the head of the river.

Raleigh.

5. Any part of a family descending in a collateral line.

His father, a younger branch of the ancient

Great Anthony Spain's well-belov'd prince, Thou mighty branch of emperors and kings!
Chapman.

The antlers or shoots of a stag's horn.
The branches of a bridle are two pieces of bended iron, that bear the bit-mouth, the chains, and the curb, in the interval between the one and the other.
Farrier's Dict.

[In architecture.] The arches of Gothic vaults; which arches transferring from one angle to another, diagonal-wise, form a cross between the other arches, which make the sides of the square, of which the arches are diagonals.
Harris.

To BRANCH, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To spread in branches.

They were trained together in their childhoods,
and their rooted betwixt them such an affection,
which cannot choose but branch now. Shakespeare.
The cause of scattering the boughs, is the hally looking forth of the sap; and therefore those trees rise not in a body of any height, but branch near the ground. The cause of the pyramid, is the keeping in of the sap, long before it branch, and the spending of it, when it beginneth to branch, by equal degrees. Bacon.

Plant it round with shade
Of laurel, evergreen, and branching plain. Milt.
Straight as a line in beauteous order stood
Of oaks unhorn a venerable wood;
Each was the graft beneath, and every tree
At distance planted, in a due degree,
Then branching arms in air, with equal space,
Stretch'd to their neighbours with a long embrace.
Dryden.

One sees her thighs transform'd, another views
Her arms that out, and branching into boughs.
Shakespeare.

2. To spread into separate and distinct parts and subdivisions.

The Alps at the one end, and the long range of Appennines that passes through the body of it, branch out, on all sides, into several different divisions. Milton.

If we would weigh, and keep in our minds,
what it is we are considering, that would best assist us when we should, or should not, branch into further distinctions. Locke.

3. To speak diffusively, or with the distinction of the parts of a discourse.

I have known a woman branch out into a long disertation upon the edging of a petticoat.
Spektator.

4. To have horns shooting out into antlers.

The swift Rag from under ground Bore up his branching head. Milton.

To BRANCH, v. a.

1. To divide as into branches.

The spirits of things animate are all continued within themselves, and are branched into canals, as blood is; and the spirits have not only branches, but certain cells or seats, where the principal spirits do reside. Bacon.

2. To adorn with needlework, representing flowers and sprigs.

In robe of hly white she was array'd,
That from her shoulder to her heel down raught,
The train whereof looke far behind her tray'd, Branch'd with gold and pearl, most richly wrought. Spenser.

BRA'NCHER, n. f. [from branch.]

1. One that shoots out into branches.

If their child be not such a speedy spreader and brancher, like the vine, yet he may yield, with a little longer expectation, as useful and more sober fruit than the other. Watson.

2. [Branchier, Fr.] In falconry, a young hawk.

VOL. I.

Enlarge my discourse to the observation of the alce, the brancher, and the two sorts of leaves. Walton.

Foliness of branches.

BRA'NCHLESS, adj. [from branch.]

1. Without shoots or boughs.

2. Without any valuable product; naked.

If I lose mine honour,
I lose myself; better I were not yours,
Than yours to branchless. Shakespeare.

BRA'NCHY, adj. [from branch.] Full of branches; spreading.

Trees on trees o'erthrown
Fall crackling round him, and the forests groan;
Sudden full twenty on the plain are throw'd,
And lopp'd and slighten'd of their branchy load.
Pope.

What carriage can bear away all the various, rude, and unwieldy loppings of a branchy tree at once? Watts.

BRAND, n. f. [brand, Saxon.]

1. A stick lighted, or fit to be lighted, in the fire.

Have I caught thee?
He that parts us shall bring a brand from heav'n,
And fire us hence. Shakespeare.
Take it, the said, and when your needs require,
This little brand will serve to light your fire.
Dryden.

If, with double diligence, they labour to retrieve the hours they have lost, they shall be raised; though this is a service of great difficulty, and like a brand plucked out of the fire. Ray.

2. [brando, Ital. brandar, Runick.] A sword, in old language.

They looking back, all th' eastern side beheld
Of Paradise, to late their happy seat,
Was'd over by that flaming brand; the gate
With dreadful faces throng'd, and fiery arms.
Milton.

3. A thunderbolt.

The fire omnipotent prepares the land,
By Vulcan wrought, and arms his potent hand.
Gray.

4. A mark made by burning a criminal with a hot iron, to note him as infamous; a stigma.

Clerks convict should be burned in the hand,
both because they might taste of some corporal punishment, and that they might carry a brand of infamy. Bacon.

The rules of good and evil are inverted, and a brand of infamy passes for a badge of honour.
Leffingwell.

5. Any note of infamy.

Where did his wit on learning fix a brand,
And rail at acts he did not understand? Dryden.

To BRAND, v. a. [brand, Dutch.] To mark with a brand, or note of infamy.

Have I liv'd thus long a wife, a true one,
Never yet brandish'd with suspicion? Shakespeare.

The king was after brandish'd by Perkin's proclamation, for an execrable breaker of the rights of holy church. Bacon.

Brand not their actions with so foul a name;
Pay, at least, what we are mov'd to blame. Dryden.
Had I dare not for thy life, I charge thee, dare not.

To brand the spotless virtue of my prince. Rowe.
Our Pannick Lord

Is infamous, and brandish'd to a proverb. Addison.
The spreader of the pardons answered him on another way, by branding him with heresy. Atterbury.

BRA'NCOOSE, n. f. A kind of wild fowl, less than a common goose, having its breast and wings of a dark colour. DiB.

To BRA'NDISH, v. a. [from brand, a suppl.]

1. To wave, or shake, or flourish, as a weapon.

Brave Macbeth,
Disdaining fortune, with his brandish'd steel,
Like valour's minion, carv'd out his passage.
Shakespeare.

He said, and brandishing at once his blade,
With eager pace pursued the flaming brand, Shakespeare.
Let me march their leader, not their prince.
And at the head of your renowned Cydonians Brandish this sword. Sallust.

2. To play with; to flourish.

He, who shall employ all the force of his reason only in brandishing of tylog lines, will discover very little. Locke.

The dew-worm, which some also call the lob-worm, and the brandling are the same. Willughby.

BRA'NDY, n. f. [contracted from brandi-wine, or burnt wine.] A strong liquor distilled from wine.

If your matter lodgeth at mine, every dram of brandy extraordinary that you desire, shall be character. Southey.

BRA'NDY-WINE. The same with brandy.

It has been a common saying, A hint of the same dog; and thought that brandy-wine is a common relic to men. Hogarth.

BRA'NGLE, n. f. [uncertainly derived.]

Squabble; wrangle; litigious contest.

The payment of tythes is subject to many squabbles, brawls, and other difficulties, not only from papists and dissenters, but even from those who profess themselves protestants. Bacon.

To BRA'NGLE, v. n. [from the noun.]

To wrangle; to squabble.

When polite conversing shall be improved, company will be no longer pestered with dull story-tellers, nor brawling disputers. Swift.

BRA'NGLEMENT, n. f. [from brangle.]

braser, Fr.]

It is thought they had no chimneys, but were warmed with coals on brasers. Chambers.

BRA'SIL, n. f. An American wood,

BRAZIL, commonly supposed to have been thus denominated, because first brought from Brazil, though Huert shows it had been known by that name many years before the discovery of that country; and the best sort comes from Fernambuc. It is used by turners, and takes a good polish; but chiefly in dying, though it gives but a spurious red.
Chambers.

BRASS, n. f. [bray, Sax. preis, Welsh.]

1. A yellow metal made by mixing copper with lapis calaminaris. It is used in popular language, for any kind of metal in which copper has a part.

From brassy boloms, and rough rents of flint. Shakespeare.

3. Impudent.

BRAST. particip. adj. [from burst.] Burst; broken. Obsolete.

Then creature never put,
That back returned without heavenly grace,
But dreadful tories which their chains have brast,
And damned frights that forth to make it even again. Spenser.

BRAU. n. f. [its etymology is uncertain;
braut, in Saxon, signifies a blanket;
from which, perhaps, the modern signification may have come.]

1. A child, so called in contempt.

He leads them like a thing
Made by some other deity than nature,
That shapen man bettes; and they follow him,
Against us braus, with no less confidence,
Than boys pursuing summer butterflies. Shakespeare.

Hence with it, and, together with the dam,
Commit them to the fire. Shakespeare.

The friends, that got the braus, were poisoned too;

In this sad case what could our vermin do? Rape in Jupiter tumoured all the birds and beasts before him, with that braus and little ones, to which of them had the prettiest endow. L'Estr.
I shall live to see the invisible lady, to whom I was obliged, and whom I never beheld since she was a braut in hanging sleeves. Swift.

I give command to kill or live,
Can grant ten thousand pounds a-year,
And make a beggar's braut a peer. Swift.

The Trojan hero did affront;
Who bravely twice renew'd the fight. Denham.
Your's door bravely did the assault sustain,
And fill'd the notes and ditches with the slain. Dryden.

BRAVERY. n. f. [from brave.]

1. Courage; magnanimity; generosity; gallantry.

It denotes no great bravery of mind, to do that out of a desire of fame, which we could not be prompted to by a generous passion for the glory of him that made us. Spenser.

Juba, to all the bravery of a hero,
Adds soft love and more than female sweetness. Alfredson.

2. Splendour; magnificence.

We are all the bravery that eye may see,
And a little happiness that heart desire,
Is to be found. Spenser.

3. Show; ostentation.

Let princes clothe ministers more sensible of duty than of rising, and such as love business rather upon conscience than upon bravery. Bacon.

4. Bravado; boast.

Never could man, with more unmanlike bravery, use his tongue to her disgrace, which lately had sung sonnets of her praises. Shakespeare.

For a bravery upon this occasion of power, they crowned their new king in the cathedral church of Dublin. Bacon.

There are those that make it a point of bravery, to bid defiance to the oracles of divine revelation. L'Estrange.

BRAVO. n. f. [from bravo, Ital.] A man who murders for hire.

For boldness, like the bravos and banditti, is seldom employed, but upon desperate services.
Government of the Tongue.

She troubled was, alas! that it might be,
With tedious brawlings of her parents dear. Shakespeare.

Here comes a man of comfort, whose advice
Hath often still'd my brawling discontent. Shakespeare.
How now? Sir John! what are you brawling here?

Does this become your place, your time, your business? Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Their bawling cannon charged to the mouth,
Till their soul-tearing clamours have brawled down

The flinty ribs of this contemptuous city. Shakespeare.
In council she gives licence to her tongue,
Lequacious, brawling, ever in the wrong. Dryden.

Leave all noisy contest, all unmodest clamour, brawling language, and especially all personal scandal and levity, to the meanest part of the vulgar world. Bacon.

Sound forth my brays; and the weak ren'd, Pope

2. [With printers; from To bray, or beat] An instrument to temper the ink.

TO BRAZE. v. a. [from brass.]
1. To solder with brass.

It is not he not to be cast in brass, but only for a worn brazed into it, this necessity is not necessarily necessary, because that worn is full of decay and bowed into the grooves of the quarrel, and you may try that before it is brazed into it. Bacon

2. To harden to impudence.

It is often blushed to acknowledge him,
When we are brazed to it. Shakespeare

It is a cruel custom both not brazed it for,
That is proud and backward against sense. Shakespeare

BRAZEN. adj. [from brass.]
1. Made of brass. It was anciently and properly written brassen.

Awakes the sleepy vigour of the soul,
And, brushing over, adds motion to the soul. South.

BRU'SHER. n. f. [from brush.] He that uses a brush.

Sir Henry Wotton used to say, that cutlers were like brushers of noblemen's cloaths. Shaksp.

BRU'SHWOOD. n. f. [from brush and wood.] I know not whether it may not be corrupted from brusshewood. Rough, low, close, shrubby thickets; small wood fit for fire.

It smokes, and then with trembling breath the blows,
Till in a cheerful blaze the flames arise.

B R U

With brushwood, and with chips, the strengthens thele,
And adds at last the boughs of rotten trees.

BRUSHY. adj. [from brush.] Rough or shaggy, like a brush.

I suspected, that it might have proceeded from some small unheeded drop of blood, wiped off by the brushy substance of the nerve, from the knife, wherewith it was cut.

BRUSTLE. v. n. [braystian, Sax.] To crackle; to make a small noise.

BRUTAL. adj. [brutal, French; from brute.]

1. That belongs to a brute; that we have in common with brutes.

There is no opposing brutal force to the stratagems of human reason.

2. Savage; cruel; inhuman.

The brutal business of the war

Is managed by thy dreadful servants cur.

BRUTALITY. n. f. [brutalité, Fr.] Savageness; churlishness; inhumanity.

Compass, in an ill-bred man, has the air, and expresses not the opinion, of brutality.

BRUTALIZE. v. n. [brutaliser, Fr.]
To grow brutal or savage.

Upon being carried to the Cape of Good Hope, seized, in a kind of transport, with his countrymen, he brutalized with them in their habit and manners, and would never again return to his former appearance.

BRUTALIZE. v. a. To make brutal or savage.

BRUTALLY. adv. [from brutal.] Churl-ishly; inhumanly; cruelly.

Mrs. Bull aimed a knife at John, though John showed a bottle at her head, very brutally understanding.

BRUTE. adj. [brutus, Latin.]

1. Senseless; unconscious.

Not yet are we so low and base as their atheism would deprecate us, not walking brutes of clay, but the sons of brute earth, whose final exit once is death and corruption.

2. Savage; irrational; ferine.

Even brute animals make use of this artificial voice of making divers motions, to have several significations to call, warn, chide, cherish, threaten.

In the promulgation of the Mosack law, it was as a brute beast touched the mountain, it was the thrush through with a dart.

3. Bestial; in common with beasts.

I can to labour, and quell, through all the earth,

For violence, and proud tyrannick power.

4. Rough; ferocious; uncivilized.

The brute philopeter, who ne'er has prov'd
The joy of loving, or of being lov'd.

BRUTE. n. f. [from the adjective.] An irrational creature; a creature without reason; a savage.

What may this mean? Language of man pronounced

By tongue of brute and human sense express'd

To those three present impulses, of sense, instinct, and instinct, most, if not all, the legacies of brutes may be reduced.

Brutes may be considered as either aerial, terrestrial, aquatic, or amphibious. I call those which have wings, wherewith they can support themselves in the air; terrestrial are those, whose only place of rest is upon the earth;

aquatic are those, whose constant abode is upon the water.

Heaven from all creatures hides the book of fate,
All but the page prescrib'd, this present state;

From brutes what men, from men what spirits know;

Or who could suffer being here below?

That with thy bruteness shoud'st thy comely age.

To BRUTIFY. v. a. [from brute.] To make a man a brute.

O thou fallacious woman! am I then brutified?
Ay; I feel it here; I spout, I bud, I am a pe-horn mad.

BRUTISH. adj. [from brute.]

1. Bestial; resembling a beast.

Of this, Isis, Orus, and their train,
With monstrous shapes and monstrous absurd Fanatick Egypt, and her priests, to seek Their wand'ring gods disguis'd in brutish forms.

2. Having the qualities of a brute; rough;
savage; ferocious.

Brutes, and brutish men, are commonly more able to bear pain than others.

3. Gross; carnal.

For thou thyself hast been a brutish,
As sensual is the brutish man.

After he has put himself into some use of himself, by much ado he begins to be brutish, again, and there adds over the same brutish scene.

4. Ignorant; untaught; uncivilized.

They were not to brutish, that they could be ignorant to call upon the name of God.

BRUTISHLY. adv. [from brutish.] In the manner of a brute; savagely; irration-ally; grossly.

I am not so different of myself, as thou art to falsely to my man's nature.

I am not so fond of a condemned practice upon a disputable principle, as thou art to outrun his reason.

BRUTISHNESS. n. f. [from brutish.] Brutality; savageness.

He loves cheap port, and double bub,
And tattles in the humdrum club.

BUBBLE. n. f. [lobbel, Dutch.]

1. A small bladder of water; a film of water filled with wind.

Bubbles are in the form of a hemisphere; in-within, and a little film of water without, and it seemeth somewhat strange, that the air should rise to twelfth, while it is in the water, and when it cometh to the top, should be stayed by to work a cover as that of the bubble is.

The colours of bubbles with which children play, are various, and change their situation variously, without any respect to colour or shadow.

2. Any thing which wants solidity and firmness; any thing that is more specious than real.

The earl of Lincoln was induced to participate, not lightly upon the strength of the proceedings there, which was but a bubble, but upon letters from the lady Margaret.

Thou a soldier,
Seeking the bubble reputation,
Even in the cannon's mouth.

War, he sung, is but and trouble,
Honour but an empty bubble,
Fighting still, and still deterring

3. A cheat; a false show.

B U C

The nation then too late will find,
Directors promise but wind,
South-sea at best a mighty bubble.

4. The person cheated.

Come, dearest mother, cease to chide;
Gony's a cheat, and I'm a bubble;

Yet why it is great exerts of trouble? Prior.
He has been my bubble twelve weary years, and,
to my certain knowledge, understands no more of his own affairs, than a child in swaddling clothes.

To BUBBLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To rise in bubbles.

Alas! a crimson river of warm blood,
Like to a bubbling fountain Paul's wind,
Dull, and outfall.

Adder's mark, and blind worm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owlet's wing;
For a charm of powerful trouble,
Like a cat's paw, and a bull's eye.

Said bubble on, and pour forth blood and tears

The same spring suffers at some times a very marvellous remission of its heat; at others, as matrix an increase of it, so, for a time, to that effect, as to make it bubble and bubble with excessive heat.

2. To run with a gentle noise.

For once the bubbling springs appear'd to mourn,
And whispering pines made vows for lay return.

Not bubbling mountains to the thirsty swain,
Nor show'rs to briars, or sunshine to the bee,
Are his charming as thy sight to me.

To BUBBLE. v. a. To cheat; a cant word.

He told me, with great passion, that she had bubbled him out of his youth, and had dined him on to five and five.

Charles Mather could not bubble a young head better with a story.

BUBBLER. n. f. [from bubble.] A cheat.

What words can suffice to express, how infinately I esteem you, above all the great ones in this part of the world; above all the Jews, jobbers, and bubblers.

BUBBLE. n. f. A woman's breast.

For I say they, to see a handsome, brisk, gently, young fellow, to much govern'd by a doctrine of woman, why don't you go and suck the bubbles?

BUBBLE. n. f. [Lat. from bubula, the groin.]

That part of the groin from the bending of the thigh to the scrotum; and therefore all tumours in that part are called bubars.

I supposed it after the manner of a bub, opened it, and endeavored detestion.

BUBONIC. n. f. [Lat. from bubula, the groin, and pus, a rupture.] A particular kind of rupture, when the intestine break down into the groin.

When the intestine, or omentum, falls into the rings of the abdominal muscles, and the groin, it is called bubonic, and is a very dangerous disease, and is often attended with a very properly fatal, and is a very common disease.

BUD. n. f. [bouton, Fr.] The first shoot of a plant; a gem.

Be as thou wilt want to be,
See as thou wilt want to be;
Dian's bud o'er Cupid's flower
Hath such force and blessed power. Shaksp.

Writers lay, as the most forward bud
Is eaten by the canker ere it blow,
Even to by love the young and tender bud
Is turn'd to folly, blissing in the bud,
Losing his verdure even in the prime. Shaksp.

When you the flowers for Chloë tame,
Why do you to her garden join
The meanest bud that falls from mine? Shaksp.

Insects wound the tender bud with a hollow trunk, and deposit an egg in the
with a sharp corroding liquor, that causes swelling in the bud, and clothe the bud.

2. Except that; unless; had it not been that; in this sense we now write but that. See sense 11.

And but infirmity,
Which waits upon worn times, hath something seized
His with'd ability, he had himself
The lands and waters measur'd. Shakespeare.

3. Yet; nevertheless. It sometimes only enforces yet.
Then let him speak, and any that shall stand without shall hear it voice plainly; but yet made extreme sharp and evil, like the voice of puppets; and yet the articulate sounds of the words will not be confounded. Bacon.

Our wants are many and grievous to be born, but quite of another kind. Swift.

4. The particle which introduces the minor of a syllogism; now.
It were he a liberty and possibility for a month, to submit to day, then it is not absolutely necessary that he shall live till to-morrow; but there is such a liberty, therefore no such necessity. Bartholomew's Epistle.

God will one time or another make a difference between the good and the evil. But there is little or no difference made in this world, therefore there must be another world, wherein this difference shall be made. Newton's Logick.

5. Only; nothing more than.
If my odiousness of mortal kind,
That not my service, past or present sorrows,
Can ransom me into his love again;
But take it to be what it may be. Shaksp.

What a propitious voice but his ears,
Will be my voice, though she have but ears. R. a. Jackson.

No, Aurora, he, you meant all my heart,
And I'm too late to give a part. Dryden.

Dryden.

The chief avenue ought to be the most ample and noble; but there should be by-walks, to retire into sometimes, for ease and retirement.

Bacon.

BY-WAY. n. f. A private and obscure way.

Night-fishers are commonly driven in by-ways, and by blind fords, unled of any but secret.

Spenser.

Other by-ways he himself betook,
Where never foot of living might did tread.

Wholly disdain or wed: thy boundless land
Allows thee choice of paths; take no by-way,
But gladly welcome what he doth intend,
Not grudging that thy lust hath bounds and end.

Hobbes.

A servant, or a favourite, if he be in ward, and no other apparent cause of esteem, is commonly thought to be a by-way to close corruption.

This is wonderfully diverting to the understanding, thus to receive a precept, as it were, through a by-way, and to apprehend an effect that draws a whole train after it.

Locke.

BY-WEST. adv. Westward; to the west of.

Whereupon grew that by-word, used by the Irish, that they dwell by-west the law, which dwelt beyond the river of the Barrow.

In medicine, by taking without mixing, the heat with these degrees; first, moderate, then marked, single, and lastly double. Boerhaave.

CALCINATION. n. f. [from caline; calcination, Fr.] Such a management of bodies by fire, as renders them reducible to powder; wherefore it is call'd chymical pulverization. This is the next degree of the power of fire beyond that of fusion; for when fusion is longer continued, not only the more subtle particles of the body itself fly off, but the particles of fire likewise insinuate themselves in such multitudes, and are so blended through its whole substance, that the fluidity, first caused by the fire, can no longer subsist. From this union arises a third kind of body, which being very porous and brittle, is easily reduced to powder; for, the fire having penetrated every where into the pores of the body, the particles are both hindered from mutual contact, and divided into minute atoms. Quincy.

Divers renderings of bodies are thrown away, as they are considered in the calcination of the body, as they are considered. Boyle.

It may be effected, but not without a calcination, or reducing it into a subtle powder. Boerhaave's Vulgar Chemistry.

Was hung on high, to boast the triumph of the day. Dryden

TO CAN. v. n. [kennen, Dutch.] It is sometimes, though rarely, used alone; but is in constant use as an expression of the potential mood; as, I can do, thou canst do, I could do, thou couldst do. It has no other terminations.]

1. To be able; to have power.

In place there is need to do good and evil, without the latter is a curse: for, in evil, the best condition is not to will; the latter, not to can. Bacon

O, there 's the wonder!
Mecenas and Agrippa, who can in all
With Cæsar, are his foes. Shakespeare

He can away with no company, whose out-countenance goes beyond what claret and disinterested inspire. Levi

2. It expresses the potential mood; as, I can do it.

It is the can make me best! the only can:
Empire and wealth, and all the things I love,
Are but the train and trappings of my love. Dryden

3. It is distinguished from may, as power from permission; I can do it, it is in my power; I may do it, it is allowed me; but in poetry they are confounded.

4. Can is used of the person with the verb active, where may is used of the thing, with the verb passive; as, I can do it, it may or can be done.

CAN

Here burns my candle out, ay, here it dies,
Which, while it lasted, gave king Henry light.
Shakespeare.

We see that wax candles last longer than tallow candle, because wax is more firm and hard.
Bacon's Natural History.

Take a child, and setting a candle before him,
you shall find his pupil to contract very much,
to exclude the light, with the brightness whereof it would otherwise be dazzled.
Ray.

2. Light, or luminary.

By these blest candles of the night,
Had you been there, I think you would have begg'd

The ring of me, to give the worthy doctor. Shak.

fraxinifolia.

CANDLEHOLDER. n. f. [from candle and holder.]

1. He that holds the candle.

2. He that remotely assists.

Let wantons, light of heart,
Tickle the senseless rufhes with their heels;
For I am proverb'd with a grandfire phrase,
To be a candleholder, and look on. Shakespeare.

CANDLELIGHT. n. f. [from candle and light.]

1. The light of a candle.

In darkness candlelight may serve to guide men's steps, which to use in the day were madness.
Hobbes.

Before the day was done, her work she sped,
And never went by candlelight to bed. Phyllis.

The hooting owl
Steals from her private cell by night,
And flies about the candlelight. Swift.

Such as are adapted to meals, will indifferently serve for dinners or suppers, only distinguishing between daylight and candlelight. Swift.

2. The necessary candles for use.

I shall find him coals and candlelight.

Moxon's Letter.

CANDLEMAS. n. f. [from candle and mas.] The feast of the Purification of the Blessed Virgin, which was formerly celebrated with many lights in churches.

The harvest dinners are held by every wealthy man, on, as we term it, by every good liver, between Michaelmas and Candlemas.

Cicero's Speeches of Cornelia.
There is a general tradition in most parts of Europe, that intereth the coldness of the succeeding winter, upon shining of the sun upon Candlemas day. Bacon's Table of Knowledge.

Come Candlemas nine years ago she died,
And now I see bury'd by the yew-tree side. Gay.

CANDLESTICK. n. f. [from candle and stick.] The instrument that holds candles.

The housemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torch-flaves in their hands, and their poor
jades

Lob down their heads. Shakespeare.

These countriers were once christian, and members of the church, and where the golden candlestick did stand. Bacon.

I know a friend, who has converted the rays of a man of quality into a kind of fringe for his candlesticks. Adams.

CANDLESTUFF. n. f. [from candle and stuff.] Any thing of which candles may be made; kitchenstuff; grease; tallow.

By the help of oil, and wax, and other candle-stuff, the flame may continue, and the wick not burn. Raven.

waste.] One that consumes candles; a spendthrift.

Patch grief with proverbs, make misfortune drunk
With candlewasters. Shakespeare.

CANDOCK. n. f. A weed that grows in rivers,

CAN

Let the pond lie dry six or twelve months, both to kill the water weeds, as water-lilies, candocks, reeds, and bulrushes; and also, that as these die for want of water, so grass may grow on the pond's bottom. Walton.

CANDOUR. n. f. [candor, Lat.] Sweetness of temper; purity of mind; openness; ingenuity; kindness.

He should have so much of a natural candour and sweetness, mixed with all the improvement of learning, as might convey knowledge with a soft of gentle insinuation. Watts.

To CANDY. v. a. [probably from candare,
a word used in later times for to whiten.]

1. To conserve with sugar, in such a manner as that the sugar lies in flakes, or breaks into spangles.

Should the poor be flattered;
No, let the candy'd tongue lick about pomp,
And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee,
Where honesty may follow fawning. Shakespeare.

They have in Turkey confections like candied
confevers, made of sugar and lemons, or sugar and citrons, or sugar and violets, and some of flowers, and mixture of amber. Bacon.

With candy'd plantains, and the juicy pine,
On choicest melons and sweet grapes they dine.
Watts.

CANDY Lion's foot. [catanance, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

CANE. n. f. [canna, Lat.]

1. A kind of strong reed, of which walk-ingstaves are made; a walkingstaff.

Shall I to please another wine sprung mind Lose all mine own? God hath given me a measure

Short of his cane and hody-mind I find
A pun in that wherein he finds a pleasure.
Hobbes.

The king thrust the captain from him with his cane, whereupon he took his leave, and went home. Harris.

If the poker be out of the way, or broken,
Put the fire with your master's cane. Swift.

2. The plant which yields the sugar.

This cane or reed grows plentifully in the East and West Indies. Other reeds have a can-tion and a drey, and their pulp void of juice, but the skin of the sugarcane is soft. It grows six or seven feet high, and about half inch in diameter. The stem or stalk is divided by knots a foot and a half apart. At the top it puts forth long green tufted leaves, from the middle of which arise the flower and the seed.
They usually plant them in pieces cut a foot and a half long, the top of the cane; and they are ordinarily ripe in ten months, at which time they are found quite full of a white succulent marrow, whence is expressed the liquor of which sugar is made. Clemens.

And the sweet liquor on the cane below,
From which proceed the luscious sugars flow.
Racine.

3. A lance; a dart made of cane: whence the Spaniards meja de canas.

Alcarnaz, a youth these sports has known,
Of which they age is now spectator grown;
Judge-like thou but'st, to praise or to arraign
The flying kinship of the dashed cane. De Witt.

4. A reed.

Food may be afforded to bees, by small or troughs conveyed into their hives. Moxon.

To CANE. v. a. [from the noun.] To beat with a walkingstaff.

CANICULAR. adj. [canicularis, Lat.]
Belonging to the dogstar.

In regard to different latitude, unto some the canicular days are in the winter, as unto such as are under the equinoctial line; for unto them the dog-star ariseth, when the sun is about the tropic of Cancer, which season unto them is winter.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CANINE. adj. [caninus, Lat.]

1. Having the properties of a dog.

A kind of women are made up of canine particles: these are scolds, who mislead the animals out of which they were taken, always busy and barking, and snarl at every one that comes in their way. Goldsmith.

2. Canine hunger, in medicine, is an appetite which cannot be satisfied.

It may occasion an exorbitant appetite of usual things, which they will take in such quantities, till they vomit them up like dogs, from whence it is called canine. Arbuzius.

as tea or coffee, is laid up.

CANKER. n. f. [cancer, Lat.] It seems to have the same meaning and original with cancer, but to be accidentally written with a k, when it denotes bad qualities in a less degree; or canker might come from chancre, Fr. and cancer from the Latin.]

1. A worm that preys upon and destroys fruits.

And loathful idleness he doth detest,
The canker worm of every gentle breast. Spenser.

That which the locust rather less, hath the canker worm eaten. Julius.

Yet waters say, as in the sweetest bud
The eating canker dwells; to eating love
Inhabits in the finest wits of all. Swift.

A bulging, thumping, flapping, clogging coward,
A canker worm of peace, was raised above him.
Crowley.

2. A fly that preys upon fruits.

Loose be of flies, caterpillars, canker flies, and beet flies. Walton's Angler.

3. Any thing that corrupts or consumes.

It is the canker and ruin of many men's estates, who, in periods of time, breed a pul-

Such a may prove an eating canker, and a consuming noise, in the estate that we live in.

No longer live the canker of my country,
Add to the civil wars with speed retreat,
Waile with what what you and all was,
To repleat the ready to, and the curate.
De Witt.

4. A kind of wild worthless rose; the dog-rose.

To put down Rascals, and to set down the rose,
And plant this strong, and lasting, and the rose.
De Witt.

Down a cherry with the leaf, the leaf, the leaf,
A beggar, a beggar, a beggar, a beggar.
De Witt.

5. An eating or corroding humour.

I am not old, I am not old, I am not old,
Should I lack a plaster for a canker's tooth,
And I should have the canker of one wound Rising in me. De Witt.

6. Corruption; virulence.

As with age, so with virulence grows
The canker of the canker. De Witt.

7. A disease in trees.

To CANKER. v. n. [from the noun.]

Was in prices like duplicate left in hands,
For mixed letters, and tubercled wiles. Fa 13 Q.
I will be the down-stood Mortimer
As high as an as this unthankful king,
As high as a head of St. Bulingbroke. St. B.
O'er the world with a canker'd venom bite.

Thou new canker, or to thy native sky,
Thou new canker, and forsake virtue! fly:
Thou new canker is deadly to thee grown;
Thou new canker and canker'd mace rule thy throne.

Let vicious jealousy and canker'd spite Produce my actions to revict my right;
And my canker'd pen be of thee true.

2. To decay by some corrosive or destructive principle.

Survive, will truly and last more than I
My canker'd pen, it might be detected with
The canker'd pen, it might be detected with
The canker'd pen, it might be detected with.

CANONIBAL. n. f. An anthropophagite; a man-eater.

The cannon men eat no man's flesh of those that die of themselves, but of such as are slain.

They were little better than cannon men, who do hunt one another: and he that hath most strength and swiftness, doth eat and devour all his fellows.

It was my hint to speak
Of the cannon that each other eat,

The cannon that each other eat,
The cannon that each other eat,

The cannon that each other eat,
The cannon that each other eat,
The cannon that each other eat,
The cannon that each other eat.

If an eleventh commandment had been given, Thou shalt not eat human flesh; would not the cannon have esteemed it more difficult than the rest?

CANNIBALLY. adv. [from cannibal.] In the manner of a cannibal.

Before Corio, he feasted him and notched him like a cannon.

Had he been cannibal, given, he might have been a cannon man too.

2. A gun larger than can be managed by the hand. They are of so many sizes, that they decrease in the bore from a ball of forty-eight pounds to a ball of five ounces.

As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks,
So they redoubled strokes upon the foe. Shaksp.
He had left all the cannon he had taken; and now he sent all his great cannon to a garrison.

The making, or price, of these gunpowder instruments, is extremely expensive, as may be easily judged by the weight of their materials; a whole cannon weighing commonly eight thousand pounds; a half cannon, five thousand; a culverin, four thousand five hundred; a demi-culverin, three thousand; which, whether it be in iron or brass, must needs be very costly.

twenty, long before he has any idea of infinity at all.

CANOA. n. f. A boat made by cutting CANOE. n. f. the trunk of a tree into a hollow vessel.

Others made rafts of wood; others devised the boat of one tree, called the canna, which the Greeks upon the R. used in adding the transportation of H. to the sea.

In a war against Semiramis, they had found out the canna, or canna, of one piece of timber.

CANNON. n. f. [from canna.]

1. A rule; a law.

The cannons, they are rules and cannons of that law, which is written in all men's hearts; for church had for every, no less than now, found found to observe them, whether the apostle had mentioned them, or no.

His books are almost the very cannons to judge between doctrine and discipline by.

Religious cannons, civil laws, are cruel;
Then what should war be?

The cannons in logic are such as these: every part of a division, singly taken, must contain less than the whole: and a definition must be peculiar and proper to the thing defined.

2. The laws made by ecclesiastical councils.

The cannon law is the law which is made and ordained in a general council, or provincial synod, of the church.

They were looked on as cannon persons, and great severity of penance were prescribed them by the cannons of Ancyra.

3. The books of Holy Scripture; or the great rule.

Cannon also denotes those books of Scripture, which are received as inspired and canonical, to distinguish them from other profane, apocrypha, or disputed books. Thus we say, that Genesis is part of the sacred cannon of the Scripture.

CAN

4. A dignity in cathedral churches.

For deans and canons, or prebends, of cathedral churches, they were of great use in the church; they were to be of council with the bishop for his revenue, and for his government, in causes ecclesiastical.

Swift much admires the place and air,
And longs to be a canon there.

A canon that's a place too mean:
No, doctor, you shall be a dean;
Two dozen canons round your stall,
And you the tyrant o'er them all.

5. Canons Regular. Such as are placed in monasteries.

6. Canons Secular. Lay canons, who have call canonesses, living after the example of secular canons.

CANONICAL. adj. [from canon, low Lat.]

1. According to the canon.

2. Constituting the canon.

Put the readings there are of books and writings, not canon, whereby the church doth preach, or openly make known, the doctrine of virtuous conversation.

No such book was found amongst those canon
in scriptures.

3. Regular; stated; fixed by ecclesiastical laws.

Seven times in a day do I praise thee, said David: from this definite number some ages of the church took their pattern for their canon hours.

4. Spiritual; ecclesiastical; relating to the church.

York anciently had a metropolitan jurisdiction over all the bishops of Scotland, from whom they had their consecration, and to whom they swore canon obedience.

In a manner agreeable to the canon.

It is a known story of the friar, who on a fasting day, bid his canon be carp, and then very canon eat it.

CANONICALNESS. n. f. [from canonical.]
The quality of being canonical.

CANONIST. n. f. [from canon.] A man versed in the ecclesiastical laws; a professor of the canon law.

John Fisher, bishop of Rochester, when the king would have translated him from that poor bishoprick, he refused, saying, he would not forsake his poor little old wife; thinking of that fifteenth canon of the Nicene council, and that of the canon, Matrimonium inter episcopum &
episcopum esse contrarium, &c. Canonicus Remensis.

Of whole strange crimes no canonist can tell
In what commandment's large contents they dwell.

CANONIZATION. n. f. [from canonize.]
The act of declaring any man a saint.

It is very suspicious, that the interests of private families, or churches, have too great a way in canonization.

TO CANONIZE. v. g. [from canon, to put into the canon, or rule for observing festivals.] To declare any man a saint. The king, desirous to bring into the house of Lancaster celestial honour, became tutor to pope Julius, to canonize king Henry vi. for a saint.

Bacon.
By those hymns all shall approve
Of canoniz'd for love.
They have a pope too, who hath the chief care
Of religion, and of canonizing whom he thinks fit, and thence have the honour of saints.

CANONRY. s. f. [from canon.] An ecclesiastical benefice in some cathedral or collegiate church, which has a prebend, or a stated allowance out of the revenues of such church, commonly annexed to it.

CANOPIED. adj. [from canopy.] Covered with a canopy.

I let me down to watch upon a bank;
With ivy canopy'd, and interwove
With haunting honey-suckle.

CANOPIE. n. f. [from canopium, low Lat.] A covering of state over a throne or bed; a covering spread over the head.

She is there brought unto a paled green,
And placed under a stately canopy.
The wallike seats of both those knights to see.

Now spread the night her spangled canopy,
And summon'd every reckless eye to sleep.

TO CANOPY. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a canopy.
The birch, the myrtle, and the bay,
Like friends did all embrace;
And their large branches did display
To canopy the place.

Birds that are most canorous, and whose notes we most commend, are of little throat, and short.

CANT. n. f. [probably from cantus, Lat., implying the odd tone of voice used by vagrants; but imagined by some to be corrupted from quaint.]
1. A corrupt dialect used by beggars and vagabonds.

2. A particular form of speaking, peculiar to some certain class or body of men.
I write not always in the proper terms of navigation, land service, or in the cant of any profession.

If we would trace out the original of that flagrant and avowed impiety, which has prevailed among us for some years, we should find, that it owes its rise to that cant and hypocrisy, which had taken possession of the people's minds, at the times of the great rebellion. Johnson's Freeholder.
Astrologers, with an old poetry cant, and a few jet books in plaits, to emulate the vulgar, have too long been suffered to abuse the world.

A few general rules, with a certain ease of words, his sometimes set up an illiterate heavy writer for a most judicious and formidable critic.

3. A whining pretension to goodness, in formal and affected terms.
Of private prodigal, while poor's you want,
And preaching in the fall-jangling cant.

4. Barbarous jargon.
The affection of some late authors, to introduce and multiply such words, is the most conspicuous in any language.

5. Auction.

VOL. I.

Numbers of these tenants, or their descendants, are now offering to sell their lands by cant, even those which were formerly free.

TO CANT. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk in the jargon of particular professions; or in any kind of formal affected language; or with a peculiar and studied tone of voice.

Men cant about matters and forms; hunt chimeras by rules of art, or dress up ignorance in words of bulk or sound, which may stop up the mouth of enquiry.

That uncouth affected garb of speech, or canting language rather, if I may so call it, which they have of late taken up, is the signal distinction and characteristic note of that, which, in that their new language, they call the godly party.

The busy, subtle serpents of the law
Did first my mind from true obedience draw;
While I did limits to the king prescribe,
And took for oracle that canting tribe.

Unskill'd in schemes by planets to fathom,
Like canting calculators, how the wars will go.

CANTATA. n. f. [Ital.] A song.

CANTATION. n. f. [from canto, Lat.] The act of singing.

CANTER. n. f. [from cant.] A term of reproach for hypocrites, who talk formally of religion, without obeying it.

CANTERBURY BELLS. See BELFLOWER.

CANTERBURY GALLOP. [In horsemanship.] The hand gallop of an ambling horse, commonly called a canter; said to be derived from the monks riding to Canterbury on easy ambling horses.

CANTHARIDES. n. f. [Latin.] Spanish flies, used to raise blisters.

The flies, cantharides, are bred of a worm, or caterpillar, but peculiar to certain fruit trees; as are the fig-tree, the pomegranate, and the wild fig; all which bear sweet fruit, and fruit that hath a kind of secret burning or sharpness; for the fig hath a milk in it that is sweet and corrosive; the pine apple hath a secret that is stinging and acerbive.

CANTHUS. n. f. [Latin.] The corner of the eye. The internal is called the greater, the external the lesser canthus.

A gentleman was seized with an inflammation and tumour in the great canthus, at the corner of her eye.

CANTICLE. n. f. [from canto, Lat.] A song; used generally for a song in scripture.

This right of estate, in some nations, is yet more significantly expressed by Moses in his canticles, in the person of God to the Jews.

CANTILIVERS. n. f. Pieces of wood framed into the front or other sides of a house, to sustain the moulding and eaves over it.

CANTION. n. f. [from cantio, Lat.] Song; verses. Not now in use.

In the eighth eclogue the same person was brought in singing a cantion of Spenser's making.

CANTILE. n. f. [Dutch, a corner; schantillon, Fr. a piece.] A piece with corners.

See how this river comes, me branking in,
And cuts me from the brim of all my land
A huge half-moon, a monstrous cantile quit.

TO CANTLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut in pieces.

But now comes cutting, if one piece thou take,
That must be cantled, and the judge go back.

CANTLET. n. f. [from cantle.] A piece; a fragment.

Northfield northmours can their force oppose;
Huge cantlets of his huskles strew the ground,
And no defence in his world's arms is found.

CANTO. n. f. [Ital.] A book, or section, of a poem.

Why, what would you do—
—Make a willow cabin at your gate,
And call upon my soul within the house;
Wine loyal cantos of contemned love.

CANTON. n. f.

1. A small parcel or division of land.

Only that little canton of land, called the English pale, containing four small thurs, did maintain a bordering war with the Irish, and retain the form of English government.

2. A small community, or clan.

The same is the case of covets by land; such, as yet, are some cantons in Arabia, and some petty kings of the mountains adjacent to Britain and ways.

TO CANTON. v. a. [from the noun.] To divide into little parts.

Families shall quit all subjection to him, and canton his empire into little governments for themselves.

It would certainly be for the good of mankind, to have all the mighty empires and monarchies of the world cantoned out into petty states and principalities.

The late king of Spain, reckoning it an indignity to have his territories cantoned out into parcels by other princes, during his own life, and without his consent, rather chose to bequeath the monarchy entire to a younger son of France.

They cantoned out to themselves a little province in the intellectual world, where they fancy the light shines, and all the rest is in darkness.

TO CANTONIZE. v. a. [from canton.] To parcel out into small divisions.

Thus was all Ireland cantoned among ten persons of the English nation.

The whole forest was in a manner cantoned amongst a very few in number, of whom some had regal rights.

CANTRED. n. f. The same in Wales as a hundred in England. For cantred, in the British language, signifieth a hundred.

The king regrants to him all that province, reserving only the city of Dublin, and the cantreds next adjoining, with the most fertile lands.

CANVASS. n. f. [from canvas, Fr. cannabis, Lat. hemp.]

1. A kind of linen cloth woven for several uses, as sails, painting cloths, tents. The matter common and necessary to let on all the canvas they could find, and by the way.

And take the canvas that fell in the wind,
We'd use main yards with flying canvas, hark!

Tell me, what's the use of that canvas,
And how it's to be used in the wind,
We'll cut a mass of canvas for the wings,
Hanging the sails and giving the wings.

With such kind of canvas sails the pinnace to fly.

And how it's to be flying, and to the found;
Then when no danger, were he there, could be.

Now she's every little life on wound.
Then Kestrel, long with in the pride,
The form of thy art, that's dead.

With nature in a generous life,
And in the canvas life.

2. The act of lifting voices, or trying them previously to the decisive act of voting. [from canvass, as it signifies a sieve.]

CAP

There be that can pack cards, and yet cannot play well: so there are some that are good in canvasses and factions, that are otherwise weak men. Bacon.

To CANVASS. v. a. [Skinner derives it from cannalaffer, Fr. to beat hemp; which being a very laborious employment, it is used to signify, to search diligently into.]

1. To sift; to examine. [from canvass, a straining cloth.]

I have made careful search on all hands, and canvassed the matter with all possible diligence. Woodward

2. To debate; to discuss.

The curs did cover a row hide in the bottom of a river, and laid their heads together how to come at it: they canvassed the matter one way and t'other, and concluded, that the way to get it, was to drink their way to it. L'Estrange

To CANVASS. v. n. To solicit; to try votes previously to the decisive act.

Elizabeth being to resolve upon an office, and being, by some that canvassed for others, put in some doubt of that person she meant to advance, said, she was like one with a lantern seeking a man. Bacon

This crime of canvassing, or canvassing, for chosen preferment, is, by the canon law, called simony. Cyprian's Parergon

CANVASS. adj. [from canvass.]

more money than what he should count when he received it.

Locke.

Flight of cashiers, or mobs, he'd never mind;
And knows no losses, while the music is kind.

Pope.

TO CASHIER. v. a. [casier, French; casare, Latin.]

1. To discard; to dismiss from a post, or a society, with reproach.

Does't not go well? Cassio hath heaven thee,
And thou by that final hurt hast cashier'd Cassio.

Shakespeare.

Seconds in factions many times prove pincushions, but many times also they prove cyphers, and are cashier'd.

Bacon.

If I had omitted what he said, his thoughts and words being thus cashier'd in my hands, he had no longer been Lucius.

Dryden.

They have already cashier'd several of their followers as mutineers.

Adams's French Dictionary.

The ruling rogues, who dread to be cashier'd, contrive, as he is hated, to be fear'd.

Swift.

2. It seems, in the following passages, to signify the same as to annul; to vacate; which is sufficiently agreeable to the derivation.

If we in old had a father corrupting his son, or a mother her daughter, we must charge this upon a peculiar anomaly and defects of nature, if the name of nature may be allowed to that which seems to be a defect of it, and deny it to be a defect of education, the common principles of humanity.

Bacon.

Some of the great men of our time, to my indignation, all over the world, and led us to hearken to those poetics, as weak or fallacious.

Dryden.

CASK. n. f. [casque, French; calus, Lat.]

1. A barrel; a wooden vessel to stop up liquor or provisions.

The potent and of himself abed, it makes a fluttering kind of noise, like the tumbling of water in a cask.

Hayes.

Perhaps tomorrow he may change his wine, and drink old sparkling Albany, or Schnee, Wholesale, and wholesale, with mould wholesale.

Dryden.

The good old cask for ever keeps unknown.

Dryden.

2. It has cask in a kind of plural sense, to signify the commodity or provision of casks.

Great inconveniences grow by the bad and being commonly ill directed and conducted, as that a great part of the beer is ever lost and cask away.

Russell.

CASKE. n. f. [casque, Fr. casque, Lat.]

CASQUE. n. f. A helmet; armour for the head; a poetical word.

Like a casque, doubly red of blood,

Fall like amazing thunder on the casque.

Of thy primitive enemy.

And then

Shing weighty stones, when from the casque they fall.

Their casques are cork, a covering to the head.

Dryden.

Why did we lead with darts

His trembling hands, and cloth beneath a casque.

His wrinkled brow?

Dryden.

CASKEE. n. f. [a diminutive of casque, a chest, Fr. casque, casquette.] A small box or chest for jewels, or things of particular value.

They found him dead, and cast into the ditch.

An empty caskee, where the jewels lay.

By some dun'd hand was staid and caskee away.

Dryden.

O ignorant poor man! what dost thou fear

Lock'd up within the caskee of thy breast?

What jewels and what riches hast thou there?

What heavenly treasure in a weak caskee?

Dryden.

C A S

Mine eye hath found that sad sepulchral rock,
That was the caske of heav'n's richest store.

Milton.

That had by chance pack'd up his choicest treasure

In one dear caske, and sav'd only that.

Orway.

This caske India's glowing gems unlocks,

And all Arabia breathes from yonder box.

Pope.

TO CASKET. v. a. [from the noun.]

To put in a casket.

I have writ my letters, casquet my treasure,

and given order for our boxes.

Shakespeare.

CASSAMUNA'IR. n. f. An aromatick vegetable, being a species of galangal, brought from the East, a nervous and stomachick simple.

Quincy.

TO CASSATE. v. a. [casser, Fr. casare, low Lat.] To vacate; to invalidate; to make void; to nullify.

This opinion supercedes and casstates the best medium we have.

Ryca in the Creation.

CASSATION. n. f. [casatio, Lat.] A making null or void.

Dish.

CASSAVI. n. f. A plant.

CASSADA. n. f. A plant.

It is cultivated in all the warm parts of America, where the root, after being divested of its milky juice, is ground to flour, and then made into cakes of bread. Of this there are two sorts. The most common has purple stalks, with the veins and nerves of a purple colour; but the stalks of the other are plain, and the leaves of a lighter green. The latter is not venomous, even when the roots are fresh and full of juice, which the negroes frequently dig up, eat, and eat, like potatoes, without any ill effects.

Milton.

CASSAWARE. See CASSIOWARY.

CASSIA. n. f. A sweet spice mentioned by Moses, Ex. xxx. 24. as an ingredient in the composition of the holy oil, which was to be made use of in the consecration of the sacred vessels of the tabernacle. This aromatick is said to be the bark of a tree very like cinnamon, and grows in the Indies without being cultivated.

Shakespeare.

And thy garments smell of myrrh, aloes, and cassia.

Shakespeare.

CASSIA. n. f. The name of a tree.

It is a tree of the size of a poplar, or a poplar, divided into many very thin and supple branches, in each of which is contained a hard seed, lodged for the most part in a fleshy husk, which is the fruit of the tree. The flowers have the smell of a rose.

CASSIOWARY. n. f. [from casio, Lat.]

The name of a plant.

C A S

The revenue of Ireland, both certain and casual, did not rise unto ten thousand pounds.

Davies on Ireland.

That which seemeth most casual and subject to fortune, is yet disposed by the ordinance of God.

Raleigh's History.

Whether found where casual live had wasted woods, on mountain, or in vale, Down to the veins of earth.

Milton.

The commissioners entertained themselves by the fire-side in general and casual discourse.

Clarendon.

Most of our rarities have been found out by emergency, and have been the works of time and chance, rather than of philosophy.

Gloucester.

The expenses of some of them always exceed their certain annual income; but seldom their annual supplies. I call them casual, in compliance with the common form.

Attorney.

CASUALLY. adv. [from casual.] Accidentally; without design, or set purpose.

Go, bid my woman

Search for a jewel, that too casually
Has lost mine arm.

Shakspeare.

Woe new flames, kindling on a vessel of Vengeance, had drunk up the vengeance, though the Vessel was without my flaw.

Barrow.

I should have acquainted my judge with an advantage, and which I now casually remember.

Dryden.

CASUALNESS. n. f. [from casual.] Accidentality.

CASUALTY. n. f. [from casual.]

1. Accident; a thing happening by chance, not design.

With more patience men endure the losses that
Are then by mere casualty, than the damages
Which they sustain by unjust care.

Raleigh's History.

That Octavius Cæsar should shut his camp
That night that it happened to be took by the enemy, was a mere casualty; yet it preserved a person, who lived to establish a total reformation of government in the imperial city of the world.

Swiss.

2. Chance that produces unnatural death.

Burst in the weather on the outward wall,
From the force and roid of casualty.

Shakspeare.

It is observed in particular nations, that, within the space of two or three hundred years, notwithstanding all casualty, the number of men doubles.

Bacon's Theory.

We find one casualty in our bills, of which,
though there be daily talk, there is little effect.

Gravina's Bill of Mortality.

CASUIST. n. f. [casuiste, Fr. from casus, Lat.] One that studies and settles cases of conscience.

The judgment of any casuist, or learned divine, concerning the state of a man's soul, is not sufficient to give him confidence.

South.

You can force me a bench of porters without two or three casuists in it, that will settle you the rights of princes.

Amory.

Who shall decide when doctors disagree,
And boundest casual doubt, like you and me?

Pope.

CASUISTICAL. ad. [from casuist.] Relating to cases of conscience; containing the doctrine relating to cases.

What arguments they have to beguile poor, simple, and idle souls with, I know not; but surely the practical, casual, that is, the practical, part of their religion, favours very little of frivolity.

South.

CASUISTRY. n. f. [from casuist.] The science of a casuist; the doctrine of cases of conscience.

This concession would not pass for good casuistry in these ages.

Pope's Odyssey, Notes.

Morality, by her false guardians drawn,
Chide in fairs, and casuistry in laws.

Pope.

CAT. n. f. [katz, Teuton. chat, Fr.] A domestic animal that catches mice, commonly reckoned by naturalists the lowest order of the leonine species.

'Twas you means'd the riddle:

Cat, that can judge as fitly of his worth,

As I can of those mysteries, which leave'n

Will not have earth to know. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd. Shakspeare.

A cat, as she beholds the light, draws the ball of her eye small and long, being covered over with a green skin, and dilates it at pleasure.

Peacham on Drawing.

CAT. n. f. A sort of ship.

CAT in the pan. [imagined by some to be rightly written: Catipen, as coming from Catipania. An unknown correspondent imagines, very naturally, that it is corrupted from Cate in the pan.]

There is a cunning when we, in England, call the turning of the cat in the pan; which is, when that which a man says to another, he lays it as it another had said it to him.

Bacon.

CAT o' nine tails. A whip with nine lashes, used for the punishment of crimes.

You dread reformers of an impious age,

Your cat o' nine tails to the flag,

This once be just, and in our cause engage.

Prologue to Vanburgh's False Friend.

CATACHRE'SIS. n. f. [καταχρησις, abuse.] It is, in rhetoric, the abuse of a trope, when the words are too far wrested from their native signification; or when one word is abusively put for another, for want of the proper word; as, a voice beautiful to the ear. Smith.

CATACHRE'STICAL. ad. [from catachre'sis.] Contrary to proper use; forced; far fetched.

A cat's paw is a derived similitude it holds with men, that is, in a dislocation. Bacon.

CATACLYSM. n. f. [κατακλυσμος.] A deluge; an inundation: used generally for the universal deluge.

The opinion that held these cataclysms and empyreos universal, was such as held that it put a total conflagration unto things in this lower world.

Hall's Origin of Mankind.

CATACOMBS. n. f. [from κατα, and κομῆς, a hollow or cavity.] Subterraneous cavities for the burial of the dead; of which there are a great number about three miles from Rome, supposed to be the caves and cells where the primitive christians hid and assembled themselves, and where they interred the martyrs, which are accordingly visited with devotion. But, anciently, the word catacomb was only understood of the tombs of St. Peter and St. Paul. Chandler.

On the side of Naples are the catacombs, which must have been full of stench, if the dead bodies that lay in them were left to rot in open air.

CATAGMATICK. ad. [καταγματικῶς, a figure.] That has the quality of confounding the parts.

I put on a catagmatick ring, and, by the use of a laced glove, rendered the pious is-ling, and strength end it. H'burn's Sermon.

CATALAPSE. n. f. [καταληψις.] A lighter species of the apoplexy, or epilepsy.

There is a disease called a cataplexy, wherein the patient is suddenly seized without sense or motion, and remains in the same posture in which the disease seizes him.

A. B. Keck.

CATALOGUE. n. f. [καταλογος.] An enumeration of particulars; a list; a register of things one by one.

In the catalogue ye go for men, Showgates, water rags, and deny wolves, are cleped.

All by the name of dogs. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Make a catalogue of prosperous treacherous perfers, and I believe they will be repeated faster than the alphabet. South.

In the library of manuscripts belonging to St.
Leger, of which there is a printed catalogue,
I found into the Virgin, which is a very inequity with that of the Virgin. Madison.

The bright Trogus, and a fleet of Bays,
With all the rest, catapulta, catapulta, catapulta.

CATAPULTA. n. f. [from cat and pulta.] A fierce animal, resembling a cat.

The black prince of Monomotapa, by whose force we got the glowing catapultas, and the quadrating catapultas.

CATAPHRASI. n. f. [καταφρασις, Lat.] A horseman in complete armour.

Of old time were armed cataphraces,
Borne on a horse, before him, and behind,
Archer and fencer, cataphraces, cataphraces.

Mat. 23.

CATAPLASM. n. f. [καταπλασμα.] A poultice; a soft and moist application.

The cataplasms of a new cataplasma,
So moist, that it had dip in the sea,
Where it draws blood, cataplasma for cure,
Cathartic, man, cataplasma that have value
Under the moon can have. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

Warm cataplasms dilate, but feeding may confirm the humour. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

CATAPULT. n. f. [catapulta, Lat.] An engine used anciently to throw stones.

The catapulta violently flung great stones and quarries, as also the catapulta. Caesar's History.

CATARACT. n. f. [καταρακτης.] A fall of water from on high; a shoot of water; a cascade.

Flow, winds, and crack your cheeks; rage, how!

You cataracts and hurricanes, spout,
Till you have drench'd our steeples. Shakspeare.

What if all

Her throes were opened, and she men
Or hell should find it cataract of fire?
Impossible to think. Madison's Paradise Lost.

No cataract, with them, cataract in the Sundered, shall in the cataract light,
And the cataract sound, but all the cataract
Of the cataract on the earth that year
Rings, and night. Madison's Paradise Lost.

Ten cataracts and loud imperious cataracts,
Three cataracts and loud imperious cataracts,
Rings, and night. Madison's Paradise Lost.

And to the vale convey them, cataracts.

CATARACT. [In medicine.] A disorder of the eye, when the cloud, mucus, and lines seem to float about in the eye; when confirmed, the pupil of the eye is either wholly, or in part, covered, and shut up with a little thin skin, so that the light has no entrance. Quincy.

Some cataracts are such, which can be removed, and some, which cannot. Madison's Paradise Lost.

CATAARRH. n. f. [καταρρις, d'fuo.] A fluxion of a sharp serum from the glands about the head and throat, generally occasioned by a distillation of insensible perspiration, or cold, wherein what should pass by the skin, oozes out upon those glands, and occasions irritations. The causes are, whatsoever occasions too great a quantity of serum ; whatsoever hinders the discharge by urine, and the pores of the skin. Quincy.

All febrile kinds,
Convulsions, epilepsies, hence catarrhs.

Paradise Lost.
Neither was the body then subject to die by piecemeal, and languish under coughs, catarrhs, or consumptions. South.
CATARRHAL. } adj. [from catarrh.]
CATARRHOUS. } Relating to a catarrh ; proceeding from a catarrh.

The catarrhal fever requires evacuations. Feyer.
Old age, attended with a glutinous cold,
catarrhus, leuco-phlegmatic constitution.

CATASTROPHE. n. f. [from καταστροφή.]

1. The change, or revolution, which produces the conclusion or final event of a dramatic piece.

Pat.—He comes like the catastrophe of the old comedy. Shakespeare.

That philosopher declares for tragedies, whose catastrophes are unhappy, with relation to the principal characters. Pope.

2. A final event ; a conclusion generally unhappy.

Hence was a mighty revolution, the most horrible and portentous catastrophe that nature ever yet saw ; an elegant and habitable earth quite thundered. Woodward's Natural History.

CATCAL. n. f. [from cat and call.] A squeaking instrument, used in the playhouse to condemn plays.

A young lady, at the theatre, conceived a passion for a notorious rake that headed a party of catcalls. Speator.

Three catcalls he the while
Of him, whose chattering shames the monkey tribe. Pope.

To CATCH. v. a. pret. I catched or caught ; I have catched or caught. [ketjen, Dutch.]

1. To lay hold on with the hand : intimating the suddenness of the action.

And when he arose against me, I caught him by his beard, and smote him, and slew him. 1 Sam.

2. To stop any thing flying ; to receive any thing in the passage.

Others, to catch the breeze of breathing air,
To Tullium or Algid repair. 10th Sat. Pers.

3. To seize any thing by pursuit.

I saw him run as a gilded butterfly, and, when he caught it, he let it go again ; and after it again ; and over and over he came, and up again ; and caught it again. Shakespeare's Cor.

4. To stop any thing falling ; to intercept falling.

A shepherd diverted himself with toying up eggs, and catching them again. Spenser.

5. To ensnare ; to entangle in a snare ; to take or hold in a trap.

And they sent unto him certain of the Pharisees and of the Herodians, to catch him in his words. Mark.

These artificial methods of reasoning are more adapted to catch and entangle the mind, than to instruct and inform the understanding. Locke.

6. To receive suddenly.

The coming smoke mounts heavy from the fires,
At length it catches flame, and in a blaze expires. Dryden.

But stopped for fear, thus violently driving,
The sparks that catch his axle-tree of heav'n. Dryden.

7. To fasten suddenly upon ; to seize.

The miser catches under the thick boughs of a great oak, and his hand caught hold of the oak. 2 Samuel.

Would they, like Benbow's ambassador, catch him at every turn, and expression. Lucy of Pety.

C A T

8. To seize unexpectedly.

To catch something out of his mouth, that they might accuse him. Luke.

9. To seize eagerly.

They have caught up every thing greedily, with that busy minute curiosity, and unsatisfactory in-quisitiveness, which Seneca calls the disease of the Greeks. Pope.

I've perus'd her well ;
Beauty and honour in her are so mingled,
That they have caught the king. Shakespeare.

10. To please ; to seize the affections ; to charm.

For I am young, a novice in the trade,
The fool of love, unpractic'd to persuade,
And want the soothing arts that catch the fair,
But, caught myself, lay struggling in the snare. Dryden.

11. To receive any contagion or disease.

I cannot name the disease, and it is caught
Of you that yet are well. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Those measles,
Which we disdain should tetter us, yet seek,
The very way to catch them. Shakespeare's Cor.

In sooth I know not why I am to sad ;
It wearies me ; you say it wearies you ;
But how I catch it, find it, or come by it,
I am to learn. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

The softest of our British ladies expose their necks and arms to the open air ; which the men could not do without catching cold, for want of being accustomed to it. Adelphi's Character.

O, call the winds to roll long avalanches to roars,
Proud to catch cold at a Venetian door. Pope.

12. To catch at. To endeavour suddenly to lay hold on.

Silly notions
Will catch at us like humbugs, and cold chimeras Ballad us out of tune. Shakespeare's As You Like It.

Make them catch at all opportunities of subverting the state. Addison's State of the War.

To CATCH. v. n.

1. To be contagious ; to spread infection, or mischief.

'Tis time to give them physic, then diseases
Are grown to catch us. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Sickness is catching ; O, were favour to Yours would catch, for He may, ere I go. Shakespeare's Cor.

Considering it with all its malignity, and catching nature, it may be enumerated with the worst of epidemics. Hart.

The palace of Diophobus ascends
In smoky flames, and catches on his friends. Dryden.

Does the sedition catch from man to man,
And run among the ranks. Shakespeare's As You Like It.

2. To lay hold suddenly : as, the hook catches.

When the yellow hair in flame should fall,
The catching fire might burn the golden cawl. Dryden.

CATCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Seizure ; the act of seizing any thing that flies or hides.

Taught by his open eye,
His eye, that could mark her sudden gait,
That he would fain the catch of Stephen live. Sidney.

2. Watch ; the posture of seizing.

Both of them lay upon the catch for a great action ; it is no wonder, therefore, that they were often engaged on one subject. Addison.

3. An advantage taken ; hold laid on, as in haste.

All which notions are but ignorant catches of a few things, which are most obvious to men's observations. Bacon.

The motion is but a catch of the wit upon a few instances ; as the manner is in the philosophy received. Bacon.

Late of empires, and the fall of kings,
Should turn on flying hours, and catch of moments. Dryden.

4. The act of taking quickly from another.

C A T

Several quires, placed one over against another and taking the voice by catches anthem wife, give great pleasure. Bacon.

5. A song sung in succession, where one catches it from another.

This is the tune of our catch, play'd by the picture of nobody. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Far be from thence the glutton parasite,
Singing his drunken catches all the night. Dryden.

The meat was serv'd, the bowls were crown'd,
Catches were sung, and healths went round. Pope.

6. The thing caught ; profit ; advantage.

Hector shall have a great catch, if he know out your brains ; he were as good crack a nut nut with no kernel. Shakespeare.

7. A snatch ; a short interval of action.

It has been writ by catches, with many intervals. Locke.

8. A taint ; a slight contagion.

We retain a catch of those pretty fancies, and our awakened imagination smiles in the recollection. Glanville's Sequel.

Scallops will move to strongly, as oftentimes to lap out of the catcher wherein they are caught. Grew's Microscop.

CATCHFLY. n. f. [from catch and fly.]
A plant ; a species of campion.

CATCHPOLL. n. f. [from catch and poll.]
A serjeant ; a bumbailiff.

Catchpoll, though now it be used as a word of contempt, yet, in ancient times, it seems to have been used without reproach, for such as we now call serjeants of the mace, or any other that was to assist men upon any cause. Cowley.

They call all temporal businesses underhandness, as if they were but matters for underhandedness and catchpolls ; though many times their underhand-ness do more good than their high speediness. Bacon's Essay.

Another monster,
Sullen of aspect, by the vulgar call'd
A catchpoll, whose palated hands the gods
With force incredible and magic charms
First have endued, if he his ample palm
Should haply on ill-fated shoulder lay Of debtor. Phil.

CATCHWORD. n. f. [from catch and word. With printers.] The word at the corner of the page under the last line, which is repeated at the top of the next page.

CATE. n. f. Food ; something to be eaten. This is scarcely read in the singular. See CATES.

We'll see what cate you have,
For soldiers' stomachs always serve them well. Shakespeare.

CATHECHETICAL. adj. [from κατηχητικός.]
Consisting of questions and answers.

Socrates introduced a catechetical method of arguing ; he would ask his adversary question upon question, till he convinced him, out of his own mouth, that his opinions were wrong. Addison.

CATHECHETICALLY. adv. [from catechetical.]
In the way of question and answer.

To CATHECHISE. v. a. [κατηχίζω.]

1. To instruct by asking questions, and correcting the answers.

I will catechise the world for him ; that is make questions, and bid them answer. Shakespeare.

Had those three thousand souls been catechised by our modern caluists, we had seen a wide difference. Party of Pity.

C A T

a. To question; to interrogate; to examine; to try by interrogatories.

Why then I took my teeth, and catechise
My poked man of countries. Shakespeare.

There flies about a strange report,
Of some express arriv'd at court;
I'm stopp'd by all the fools I meet,
And catechis'd in every street. Swift.

CA'TICHISER. n. f. [from To catechise.] One who catechises.

CA'TECHISM. n. f. [from κατήχησις.] A form of instruction by means of questions and answers, concerning religion.

Ways of teaching there have been sundry, always usual in God's church; in the first introduction of youth to the knowledge of God, the Jews even till this day have their catechism. Huet.

He had no catechism but the curation, needed to study but reflection, and read to look but the volume of the world. South.

CA'TECHIST. n. f. [κατήχης.] One whose charge is to instruct by questions, or to question the uninstructed concerning religion.

Some of years and knowledge was admitted, who had not been instructed by the catechism with its foundation, which the catechist received from the bishop. Hammond's Fundamentals.

CATECHUMEN. n. f. [κατήχουμενος.] One who is yet in the first rudiments of christianity; the lowest order of christians in the primitive church.

The prayers of the church did not begin in St. Austin's time, till the catechumens were dismissed. Stillingfleet.

CATECHUMENICAL. adj. [from catechumen.] Belonging to the catechumens. Diss.

CATEGORICAL. adj. [from category.] Absolute; adequate; positive; equal to the thing to be expressed.

The king's commissioner's desired to know, whether the parliament's commissioner did believe that bishops were unlawful? They could never obtain a categorical answer. Clarke.

A single proposition, which is also categorical, may be divided again into simple and complex. Watts.

CATEGORICALLY. adv. [from categorical.]

1. Directly; expressly.

2. Positively; plainly.

I dare affirm, and that categorically, in all parts wherever trade is great, and continues so, that trade must be nationally profitable. Chubb.

CATEGORY. n. f. [κατηγορία.] A class; a rank; an order of ideas; a predicament.

The absolute infinitude, in a manner, quite change the nature of being, and exalts them into a different category. Chubb.

CATENARIAN. adj. [from catena, Lat.] Relating to a chain; resembling a chain.

In geometry, the catenarian curve is formed by a rope or chain hanging freely between two points of suspension. Hutton.

Was no dispute between
The caterwailing brethren? Hudibras.

CATES. n. f. [of uncertain etymology; Skinner imagines it may be corrupted from delicate; which is not likely, because Junius observes, that the Dutch have later in the same sense with our cater. It has no singular.] Viands; food; dish of meat; generally employed to signify nice and luxurious food.

The fair acceptance, his, creates
The entertainment perfect, not the cates. Ben Jonson.

O wasteful riot, never well content
With low pur'd fare; hunger ambitious
Of cates by land and sea far seek'd and sent. Keble.

C A T

Alas, how simple to these cates,
Was that crude apple that diverted Eve! Milton.
They, by the alluring odour drawn, in haste
Fly to the dulcet cates, and crowding sip
Their palatable banes. Philips.
With costly cates she flann'd her frugal board,
Then with forgotten wealth she bought a lord. Arbutnot.

CATHARTICAL. adj. [καθάρσις.] Purgative. CATHARTICK. } ing medicines. The vinicular or portulack motion of the guts continually helps on their contents, from the pylorus to the rectum; and every irritation either quickens that motion in its natural order, or occasions some little inversions in it. In both, what but slightly adheres to the coats will be loosened, and they will be more agitated, and thus rendered more fluid. By this only it is manifest, how a cathartic hastens and increases the discharges by stool; but where the force of the stimulus is great, all the apperages of the bowels, and all the viscera in the abdomen, will be twitched; by which a great deal will be drained back into the intestines, and made a part of what they discharge. Quincy.

Quicksilver precipitated either with gold, or without addition, to a powder, is wont to be strongly enough cathartick, though the chymists have not proved, that either gold or mercury hath any salt, much less any that is purgative. Boyle's Sept. al Chym.

Lubrations and catharticks of the mind were sought for, and an endeavour used to calm and regulate the fury of the passions. Deacy of Poetry.

The piercing causticks ply their spiritual power, Emetics sanch, and keen catharticks scour. Garrick.

Ere to thy cause, and thee, my heart inclin'd,
Or love to party had reduc'd my mind. Talbot

To CAUSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To effect as an agent; to produce.

Never was man whose apprehensions are sober, and by a pensive inspection advis'd, but hath found by an irresistible necessity one everlasting being, all for ever causing, and all for ever sustaining. Ralph

It is necessary in such a chain of causes to ascend to and terminate in some first, which should be the original of motion, and the cause of all other things; but itself be caused by none. Smith

She weeping ask'd, in this her blooming years,
What unforeseen misfortune caus'd her care,
To loath her life, and languish in despair. Dryden

Things that move so swift as not to affect the senses distinctly, and so cause not any train of ideas in the mind, are not perceived to move.

CAUSELESSLY. adv. [from causeless.] Without cause; without reason.

Human laws are not to be broken with scandalous, nor at all without reason; for he that does it causelessly, is a despiser of the law, and undermines its authority. Taylor's Holy Living

CAUSELESS. adj. [from cause.]

1. Having no cause; original in itself.

Reach th' Almighty's sacred throne,
And make his causeless power, the cause of all things, known. Blackmore's Creation

2. Wanting just ground or motive.

Yet is my truth yphigir,
And love avow'd to other lady late,
That, to remove the same, I have no might;
To change love causeless, is reproach to warlike
knight. Spenser's Fairy Queen

And me and mine threats not with war but death;

Thus causeless hatred endless is unseemly. Faust
The causeless strike, which others have con-

Like an oak That stands secure, though all the winds employ Their ceaseless roar; and only sheds its leaves, Or masts, which the revolving spring restores.

CECITY. n. f. [cecitas, Lat.] Blindness; privation of sight.

They are not blind, nor yet distinctly see; There is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecity; they have sight enough to discern the light, though not perhaps to distinguish objects or colours.

CECUTENCY. n. f. [cecutio, Lat.] Tendency to blindness; cloudiness of sight.

There is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecity.

CEDAR. n. f. [cedrus, Lat.] A tree.

It is evergreen; the leaves are much narrower than those of the pine tree, and many of them produced out of one tubercle, resembling a painter's pencil; it hath male flowers, or catkins, produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree. The seeds are produced in large cones, squamose and tuberculate. The extension of the branches is very regular in cedar trees, the ends of the shoots declining, and thereby showing their upper surface, which is constantly clothed with green leaves, to regularly, as to appear at a distance like a green carpet, and, in waving about, make an agreeable prospect. It is surprising that this tree has not been more cultivated in England; for it would be a great ornament to barren black mountains, even in Scotland, where few other trees would grow; it being a native of Mount Libanus, where the snow continues most part of the year. Mandiel, in his travels, says, he met one of the Ingenieurs on Mount Libanus, and found it to be twelve yards six inches in circumference, and found. At about five or six yards from the ground, it was divided into five limbs, each of which was equal to a great tree. The wood of this fabulous tree is accounted proof against the putrefaction of animal bodies. The jaw-doll is thought to be one of the secrets used by the mountebanks, who pretend to have the enchanting mystery. This wood is also said to yield an oil, which is famous for preserving books and writings; and the wood is thought by Bacon, to continue above a thousand years sound.

I must yield my body to the earth: Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge, Whose arms gave shelter to the princely eagle; Under whose shade the ramping lion slept; Whose top branches overpeer'd the spread'ning vine, And kept low thralls from winter's powerful wind.

CE'DRINE. adj. [cedrinus, Lat.] Of or belonging to the cedar tree.

To CEIL. v. a. [celo, Lat.] To overlay, or cover, the inner roof of a building.

And the greater house be ceild with cedar, which he overlaid with fine gold.

How will he, from his house ceild with cedar, be content with his Saviour's lot, not to have where to lay his head?

CEILING. n. f. [from ceil.] The inner roof.

Vainish makes not only shine, but lid.

And now the thick'ning sky Like a dark, rolling flood, down rush'd the rain impetuous.

So when the sun by day, or moon by night, Strike on the polish'd battlements, the twinkling lights, The glittering spires, and there divide, And call their dials as beams from side to side.

Now on the walls, now on the pavement play, And to the ceiling dith the glaring day.

CELE'KITTY. n. f. [celeritas, Lat.] Swift-ness; speed; velocity.

We very well see in them, who thus phod, a wonderful celeritas of discourse, for, perceiving at the first but only some couple of syllables, and fearing it should be evil, they are presently, in one and the self-same breath, resolved, that what beginning soever it had, there is no possibility it should be good.

His former custom and practice was ever that of forwardness and civility to make head against them.

Thus, with imag'd wings, our swift scene flies.

In motion with no less swiftness Than the thought.

The changes concur to make a person in great; the lights, the density, and the celerity of the body moved.

Whatever increased the density of the blood, even when it increased its celerity, heats, because a denser body is hotter than a rarer.

CE'LESTIAL. adj. [celstus, Lat.] 1. Heavenly; relating to the superior regions.

You may see divers pebbles, and a crust of cement or stone between them, as hard as the pebbles themselves. Bacon.

The foundation was made of rough stone, joined together with a most firm cement; upon that was laid another layer, consisting of small stones and cement. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Bond of union in friendship.

Let not the peace of virtue, which is set before us as the cement of our love,
To keep it builded, be the ram to batter. Shaksp.

What cement should unite heaven and earth, light and darkness? Gilman's Ill.

Look over the whole creation, and you shall see, that the band or cement, that holds together all the parts of this great and glorious fabric, is gratitude. South.

TO CEMENT. v. a. [from the noun.] To unite by means of something interposed.

But how the fear of us
May cement their divisions, and bind up
The petty difference, we yet not know. Shaksp.

Liquid bodies have nothing to cement them; they are all loose and incoherent, and in a perpetual flux: even an heap of sand, or fine powder, will suffer no hollowiness within them, though they be dry substances. Burnet.

Love with white lead cements his wings;
White lead was sent us to repair
Two brightest, brittlest, earthly things,
A lady's face and chima woe. Su. fr.

TO CEMENT. v. n. To come into conjunction; to cohere.

When a wound is recent, and the parts of it are divided by a sharp instrument, they will, if held in close contact for some time, reunite by moleculation, and cement like one branch of a tree ingrafted on another. Sharp's Surgery.

Where need is, with most challenging love.

And so much duty as my mother shew'd
To you, preferring you before her father;
So much I challenge, that I may profess
Due to the Moon, my lord.

Had you not been their father, these white flakes
Dishonour'd your eyes of them.

So when a tiger sucks the bullion's blood,
A lion's head lion, challenging from the wood,
Rears loudly challenging, and challenges the food.

Halt thou yet drawn o'er young challenging John?
That still would recommend thee more to Caesar,
And challenge better terms.

6. To call any one to the performance of conditions.

I will now challenge you of your promise, to give me certain rules as to the principles of challenging.

CHALLENGE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A summons to combat.

I never in my life
Did hear a challenge urg'd more modestly.

2. A demand of something as due.

Taking for his young things care,
Left greedy eyes to them in challenge lay,
Busy with oaks did their shoulders mark.

There must be no challenge of superiority, or discountenancing of freedom.

3. In law.

An exception taken either against persons or things; persons, as in assize to the return of any one or more of them, by the prisoner at the bar. Challenge made to the jurors, is either made to the array, or to the polls: challenge made to the array, is when the whole number is excepted again, as partially empannelled: challenge to or by the poll, is when some one or more are excepted against, as not indifferent: challenge to the jurors is divided into challenge principal, and challenge for cause: challenge principal is that which the law allows without cause alleged, or farther examination; as a prisoner at the bar, arraigned upon felony, may peremptorily challenge to the number of twenty, one after another, of the jury empannelled upon him, alleging no cause.

You are mine enemy, I make my challenge,
You shall not be my judge.

CHALLENGER. n. f. [from challenge.]

1. One that defies or summons another to combat.

Young man, have you challenged Chambers the wrestler?

No, fair prince; he is the general challenger.

Death was denounc'd;
He took the summons, void of fear,
And unconcernedly cast his eyes around,
As if to mock and dare the gaily challenger.

CHAMBER of a horse. The joint or bending of the upper part of the hinder leg. Farrier's Dict.

CHAMELEON. n. f. [χελιδίων.]

The chameleon has four feet, and on each foot three claws. Its tail is long; with this, as well as with his feet, it fastens itself to the branches of trees. Its tail is flat, its nose long, in an obtus point; its back is sharp, its skin plaited, and jagged like a saw from the neck to the last joint of the tail, and upon its head it has something like a comb; like a fish, it has no neck. Some have asserted, that it lives only upon air; but it has been observed to feed on flies, caught with its tongue, which is about ten inches long, and three thick; made of white flesh, round, but flat at the end; or hollow and open, resembling an elephant's trunk. It also thinks, and grows longer. This animal is said to assume the colour of those things to which it is applied; but our modern observers assure us, that its natural colour, when at rest and in the shade, is a bluish grey; though some are yellow, and others green, but both of a smaller kind. When it is exposed to the sun, the grey changes into a darker grey, inclining to a dun colour; and its parts, which have least of the light upon them, are changed into spots of different colours. The grain of its skin, when the light doth not shine upon it, is like cloth mixed with many colours. Sometimes, when it is handled, it seems sprinkled with dark spots, inclining to green. If it be put upon a black hat, it appears to be of a violet colour; and sometimes, if it be wrapped up in linen, it is white; but it changes colour only in some parts of the body.

A chameleon is a creature about the bigness of an ordinary lizard; his head unproportionably big, and his eyes great; he moveth his head without writhing of his neck, which is inflexible, as a hog doth; his back crooked, his skin spotted with little tumours, less eminent nearer the belly; his tail slender and long; on each foot he hath five fingers, three on the outside, and two on the inside; his tongue of a marvellous length in respect of his body, and hollow at the end, which he will thrust out to prey upon flies; of colour green, and of a dusky yellow, lighter and whiter towards the belly, yet spotted with blue, white and red.

Bacon.

I can add colours even to the chameleon;

Change shapes with Proteus, for advantage.

Shakspeare.

One part devours the other, and leaves not so much as a mouthful of that popular art, which the chameleon galls at.

Decay of Poetry.

The chameleon, fed with a receiver

The colour of the thing to which it clings.

Drayton.

As the chameleon, we are known
To have no colour of our own.

But borrow from the world about us.

His white or black, or green or blue.

Pope.

odoriferous plant.

Cool violets, and orpine growing still,

Embraced balm, and cheerful galingale,

Fresh custumary, and breathful chamomile,

Dull poppy, and drink quick'ning fennel. Spenser.

For though the chamomile, the more it is trod on the faster it grows; yet youth, the more it is walked, the sooner it wears. Shaks.

Pofter drink with chamomile flowers. Pope.

To CHAMP. v. a. [champayer, Fr.]

CHA

1. To bite with a frequent action of the teeth.

Coffee and opium are taken down, tobacco by in smoke, and betel is but champed in the mouth, with a little lime.

The fiend replied, not overcome with rage;
But, like a proud steed rein'd, went haughty on,
Champing his iron curb. Milton's Paradise Lost.

At his command

The steeds expansion'd with purple flind,
And champ betwixt their teeth the foaming gold.

Dray.

2. To devour, with violent action of the teeth.

A tobacco pipe happened to break in my mouth, and the pieces left such a delicious touch on my tongue, that I champed up the remaining part.

Spenser.

To CHAMP. v. n. To perform frequently the action of biting.

Muttering and champing, as though he had had troubled him, he gave occasion to Mithras to come near him.

Shaks.

They began to repent of that they had done, and scrupulously to champ upon the bit they had taken into their mouths.

Hobbes.

His jaws did not answer equally to one another; but, by his frequent motion and champing with them, it was evident they were never luxated nor fractured.

Hume.

CHAMPAIGN. n. f. [campagne, Fr.] A flat open country.

In the abodes of the customs, meadows, you have a champaign laid open to you, in which you may at large stretch out your discourse.

Spenser's State of Ireland.

Of all these bounds,

With shadowy forests and with champaigns bright,
We make the lily.

Shakspeare.

It two bordering princes have their territory meeting on an open champaign, the more mightily will contentedly seek occasion to extend his arms unto the further border thereof.

Rabelais.

So John Norris maintained a retreat without difficulty, by the force of some miles, part of the way champing, into the city of Gaunt, with his lots of men on thin the enemy.

Bacon.

From his side two rivers flow'd,
The one winding, the other straight, and far between

Fair champaigns, with lots rivers interven'd.

Milton.

CHAMPERTORS. n. f. [from champerte. In law.]

Such as move fruits, or cause them to be moved, either by their own or others procurement, and pursue, at their proper call, to have part of the land in contest, or part of the gains.

Cowell.

CHAMPERTY. n. f. [champerte, Fr. In law.] A maintenance of any man in his suit, while depending, upon condition to have part of the thing when it is recovered.

Cowell.

CHAMPIGNON. n. f. [champignon, Fr.] A kind of mushroom.

He who friends with doubtful mushrooms best secure for you, himself champignoners.

Drayton.

It was the resemblance of a huge champignon, when it is opened, branching out into a hundred knobs.

Hobbes.

CHAMPION. n. f. [champion, Fr. campio, low Lat.]

1. A man who undertakes a cause in single combat.

In many armies, the matter should be tried by duel between two champions.

Bacon.

For hot, cold, moist, and dry, four champs fierce

Strive here for mastery, and to battle bring Their embryon atoms. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CHA

O light of Trojans, and support of Troy,
Thy father's champion, and thy country's joy!
Dryden.

At length the adverse admirals appear,
The two bold champions of each country's right.
Dryden.

2. A hero; a stout warrior; one bold in contest.

A stout champion never handled sword.
Shakespeare.

This makes you incapable of conviction; and they applaud themselves as the true champions for truth, when indeed they are contending for errors.
Locke.

3. In law.

In our common law, champion is taken no less for him that trusts the combat in his own cause, than for him that fights in the case of another.
Cowell.

4. To CHAMPION. v. a. [from the noun.] To challenge to the combat.

The lord of B. quitted himself, Rite than for, come, Fair, into the list,
And champion me to all assistance.
Shakespeare.

5. CHANCE. n. f. [chance, Fr.]

1. Fortune; the cause of fortuitous events.

Accident or good luck is guilty
Of what we wisely do, and we proudly Ourselves take the title of chance, and then
Of every wind that blows.
Shakespeare.

The only way of all to fortune is to follow
The path my duty, with worth for company.
Dryden.

Chance is what a mere chance, and really nothing in itself, a conception of our minds, and only a compendious way of speaking, whereby we would express, that such effects as are commonly attributed to chance, were really produced by other true and proper causes, but without their effect to produce them.
Boswell.

2. Fortune; the act of fortune; what fortune may bring; applied to persons.

The chance of a community not of to years, but of a few days.
Boswell.

3. Accident; casual occurrence; fortuitous event.

To lay a charge on a man, or a family, as it relates to second causes, is not proper; but a good trust, as in the case of a man, that there are some events besides the knowledge and power of second causes.
South.

The beauty I beheld has struck me dead,
Unknowingly the flatterer, and kindly Poison in her eyes, and death in every glance.
Dryden.

All nature is but art, unknown to thee;
All chance direction, which thou canst not see.
Keats.

4. Event; success; luck; applied to things.

Now we'd together, and the chance of good
Be like our warranted quack.
Shakespeare.

5. Misfortune; unlucky accident.

You were used
To try extremity was the trial of spirits,
That common chance common men could bear.
Shakespeare.

6. Possibility of any occurrence.

A chance, but chance may lead, where I am meet.

Some wand'ring spirit of the air, by fountain side,
Or in thick shade retir'd.
Milton's Par. Lost.

Then your ladyship might have a chance to drop this address.
Swift.

- CHANCE. adj. [It is seldom used but in composition.] Happening by chance.

Now should they part, malicious tongues would lay,
They met like chance companions on the way.
Dryden.

I would not take the gift,
Which, like a toy dropt from the hands of fortune,
Lies for the next chance cover.
Dryden.

7. To CHANCE. v. n. [from the noun.] To happen; to fall out; to fortune.

CHA

Think what a chance thou chancest on; but think—

Thou hast thy mistress still.
Shakespeare.

How chance thou art not with the prince thy brother?
Shakespeare.

Ay, Cæsar, tell us what hath chance'd to-day,
That Cæsar looks so sad.
Shakespeare.

He chance'd upon divers of the Turks' victuals, whom he easily took.
Knight's Hist. of the Turks.

I chide the later fets, and chance'd to find
A river's mouth impervious to the wind.
Pope.

CHANCE-MEDLEY. n. f. [from chance and medley. In law.]

The casual slaughter of a man, not altogether without the fault of the slayer, when ignorance or negligence is joined with the chance; as if a man lop trees by an highway-side, by which many usually travel, and call down a bough, not giving warning to take heed thereof, by which bough one passing by is slain; in this case he offends, because he gave no warning, that the party might have taken heed to himself.
Cowell.

If I had more should have the ill hap, at any time, to think a man did with a fatal laying, it ought, in all reason and conscience, to be imputed but to chance only.
South.

CHANCEABLE. adj. [from chance.] Accidental.

The fatal chance was cut off by the chance coming to the back of the neck.
South.

CHANCEFUL. adj. [chance and ful.] Hazardous. Out of use.

My lord would offer you a company
In this adventurous chance of jeopardy.
Shakespeare.

CHANCEL. n. f. [from cancelli, Lat.]

lattice, with which the chancel was enclosed.] The eastern part of the church, in which the altar is placed.

Whether it be show'd or no, that the minister should have service there.
Holt.

CHANCELLOR. n. f. [from cancellarius, Lat.]

chancellarius, Fr. from cancellarius, litterarum scriptum latus for maior ducta diuina; and seemeth of itself I likewise to be derived a cancelli, which signifies all one with cancelli, a lattice; that is, a thing made of wood or iron bars, laid crossways one over another, so that a man may see through them in and out.

It may be thought that judgment seats were compell'd to with bars, to defend the judges and other officers from the press of the multitude, and yet not to hinder any man's view.

Quæstus regni tibi cancellarius Angli.

Primus solutus mente pendens erit.

His est, qui regni leges cancellat iniquas.

Et mandata per principis aqua facit.

Verbes of Nigel de Wicke to the bishop of Ely, chancellor to Richard I.]

1. The highest judge of the law.

Cancellarius, at the first, signified the regent or guardian in court; prophetaus, qui confidendum est excepimus iudicium acti dicti opram. But this name is greatly advanced, and, not only in other kingdoms but in this, is given to him that is the chief judge in cause of property; for the chancellor hath power to moderate and temper the written law, and subjecteth himself only to the law of nature and conscience.
Cowell.

CHA

Turn out, you rogue! how like a beast you lie!
Go, buckle to the law. Is this an hour
To stretch your limbs? you'll ne'er be chancellor.
Dryden.

Archelus was a person of the strictest justice, and best acquainted with the laws, as well as forms, of their government; to that he was in a manner, chancellor of Athens.
Swift.

CHANDLER. n. f. [chandelier, Fr.] An artisan whose trade it is to make candles, or a person who sells them.

CHA

The sick that thou hast drunken me, would have bought me lights as good cheap at the dear-est. Shakespeare.

But wouldst thou had lighter dyes been worn,
The chamberlain's basket, on his shoulder born,
With tallow spits thy coat. Gay.

CHANFRIN. n. f. [old French.] The forepart of the head of a horse, which extends from under the ears, along the interval between the eyebrows, down to his nose. Farrier's Dict.

To CHANGE. v. a. [changer, Fr. canlia, Lat.]

1. To put one thing in the place of another.
He that cannot look into his own crutch, had need choose well whom he employeth, and leave them off; for now are more than ever, and less subtle. Rochester's Letters.

2. To quit any thing for the sake of another; with for before the thing taken or received.
Perce is grown up in the belief of a witch, and cannot change, but for another, with all the other understanding duty to consider and compare both. South.

They change for better, and we change for worse. Dryden.

3. To give and take reciprocally; with the particle with before the person to whom we give, and from whom we take.
To feed the clement, look upon these thousands, to whom thou wouldst not, for any interest, change thy fortune and condition. Taylor's Rule of Living.

4. To alter; to make other than it was.
Thou shalt not see me bluish,
Nor change my countenance for this art;
A heart unpotted is not easily daunted. Shelley.

Whatsoever is brought upon thee, take cheer-fully, and be patient when thou art changed to a low estate. Boethius.

For the elements were set in themselves by a kind of harmony; like as in a plastery notes change the name of the tune, and yet are always sounds. Bacon.

5. To mend the disposition or mind.
I would the were in heaven, to the world
Imprint some power to change this cruel few. Shakespeare.

6. To discount a larger piece of money into several smaller.
A shopkeeper might be able to change a guinea, or a moidore, when a customer comes for a crown's worth of goods. Steele.

7. To change a horse, or to change hands, is to turn or bear the horse's head from one hand to the other, from the left to the right, or from the right to the left. Farrier's Dict.

To CHANGE. v. n.

1. To undergo change, to suffer alteration; as, his fortune may soon change, though he is now so secure.
One Julia, that his changing thought forgot,
Would better fit his chamber. Shakespeare.

2. To change, as the moon; to begin a new monthly revolution.
I am weary of this moon; would he would change. Shakespeare.

CHANGE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An alteration of the state of any thing.
Since I saw you last,
There is a change upon you. Shakespeare.

2. A succession of one thing in the place of another.
O wondrous changes of a fatal scene,
Still varying to the last! Dryden.

Nothing can cure this part of ill-breeding, but change and variety of company, and that of persons above us. Locke.

Empires by various turns shall rise and set;
While thy abandon'd tribes shall only know
A different master, and a change of time. Prior.

Hear how Timotheus' various lays surprize,
And bid alternate passions fail and rise!
While, at each change, the son of Libyan Jove
Now burns with glory, and then melts with love. Pope.

3. The time of the moon in which it begins a new monthly revolution.
Take seeds or roots, and let some of them immediately after the change, and others of the time kind immediately after the full. Raou.

4. Novelty; a state different from the former.
The hearts
Of all his people shall revolt from him,
And kiss the lips of unacquainted change. Shakespeare.

Our fathers did, for a change, to France repair;
And they, for change, will try our English air. Dryden.

5. [In singing.] An alteration of the order in which a set of bells is founded.
Four bells admit twenty-four changes in ringing, and five bells one hundred and twenty. Heister's Elements of Speech.

Easy it may be to contrive new postures, and ring other changes upon the same bells. Newton.

6. That which makes a variety; that which may be used for another of the same kind.
I will now put forth a riddle unto you; if you can find it out, then I will give you thirty sheets, and thirty change of garments. Shakespeare.

7. Small money, which may be given for larger pieces.
Wood buys up our old halfpence, and from thence the present want of change arises; but supposing not one farthing of change in the nation, five-and-twenty thousand pounds would be sufficient. Swift.

8. Change for exchange; a place where persons meet to traffick and transact mercantile affairs.
The bar, the bench, the change, the schools and pulpits, are full of quacks, jugglers, and plagiaries. Leffingwell.

CHANGEABLE. adj. [from change.]

1. Subject to change; fickle; inconstant.
A steady mind will admit steady methods and counsels; there is no measure to be taken of a changeable humour. Leffingwell.

As I am a nun, I must be changeable; and sometimes the gravest of us are so, even upon ridiculous accidents. Dryden.

other ways. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Draw them to Tyber's bank, and weep
Into the channel, till the lowest stream
Do kiss the moist exalted shores of all. Shakespeare.

So th' impud' lea, which, from her wonted
course,
To gain some acres, avarice did force;
If the new banks, neglected once, decay,
No longer will from her old channel flow. Waller.

Had not the said strata been dislocated, some of them elevated, and others depressed, there would have been no cavity or channel to give accession to the water of the sea. Waller.

The tops of mountains and hills will be continually washed down by the rains, and the channels of rivers abraded by the streams. Bacon.

Founded in reason, loyal, just, and pure,
Relations dear, and all the charities
Of father, son, and brother, first were known. Milton.

2. Good-will; benevolence; disposition to think well of others.

My errors, I hope, are only those of charity to mankind; and such as my own charity has caused me to commit, that of others may more easily excuse. Dryden.

3. The theological virtue of universal love.

Concerning charity, the final object which it is that incomprehensible beauty which shines in the countenance of Christ, the Son of the living God. Halle.

Peace, peace, for shame, if not for charity —
—Urged neither charity nor shame to me;
Uncharitably with me have you dealt. Shakspere.

Only add
Deeds to thy knowledge answerable; add faith,
Add virtue, patience, temperance; add love,
By name to come call'd charity, the soul
Of all the rest. Milton.

Faith believes the revelations of God; hope expects his promises; charity loves his communications and mercies. Taylor.

But lasting charity's more ample sway
Ner bound by time, nor subject to decay,
In happy triumph shall for ever live. Pope.

Charity, or a love of God, which works by love of our neighbour, is greater than faith, hope. After a.

C H A

Words, or philtres, or characters, imagined to have some occult or unintelligible power.

I never knew a woman so dote upon a man; surely I think you have charms.—Not I, I assure thee; sitting in the attraction of my good parts aside, I have no other charms. Shakespeare.

There have been used, either barbarous words, of no sense, lest they should disturb the imagination; or words of similitude, that may second and feed the imagination: and this was ever as well in heathen charms, as in charms of later times. Bacon.

Anyone he names amidst his prayers, Names as a charm against the waves and wind, Melt in his mouth, and ever in his mind. Dryden.
Amicus could, by magic charms,
Recover strength to where'er he fell. Swift.

2. Something of power to subdue opposition, and gain the affections; something that can please irresistibly.

Well sounding verses are the charm we use,
Heretic thoughts and virtue to infuse. Ryd.
Nor ever hope the queen of love
Will e'er thy white's charms improve. Pope.

To land Apelles when young Ammon brought
The darling idol of his captive heart;
And the pleas'd nymph with kind attention sat,
To have her charms recorded by his art. Waller.

But what avail her unexhausted stores,
Her bosomy mountains, and her sunny thorns,
With all the gifts that heaven and earth impart,
The smiles of nature, and the charms of art,
When proud pretension in her valleys reigns,
And tyranny usurps her happy plains? Adison.

To CHARM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fortify with charms against evil.
Let fall thy blade on vulnerable creeds;
I bear a charmed life, which must not yield
To one of woman's brain. Shakespeare.

2. To make powerful by charms.
3. To summon by incantation.

Upon my knees
I summon you by my once commended beauty,
By all your vows of love, and that great vow
Which did incorporate and make us one. Shakespeare.

4. To subdue by some secret power; to amaze; to overpower.

I, in mine own woe charmed
Could not find death, where I did hear him groan,
Nor tell him where he struck. Shakespeare.
Mute the forced guilt can charm. Pope.

5. To subdue the mind by pleasure.

'Tis your graces
That from my mistrust confidence to my tongue
Charms this report out. Shakespeare.

Amoret! my lovely foe,
Tell me where thy strength does lie:
Where the power that charms us to,
Is thy soul, or in thy eye. Waller.

Charm by accepting, by submitting away. Pope.
Choke thus the soul almost,
And without sense, and without beauty. Waller.

CHARMED. adj. Enchanted.

Amelia was the charmed circle, where all his Spirits for ever should be enchanted. Shakespeare.
We implore thy powerful hand,
To undo the charmed band
On true virgin here outbid. Milton.

CHARMER. n. f. [from charm.]

1. One that has the power of charms or enchantments.

That handkerchief
Did an Egyptian to my mother give;
She was a charmer, and could almost read
The thoughts of people. Shakespeare.
The passion you pretended,
Was only to obtain;
But when the charm is ended,
The charmer you disdain. Dryden.

2. Words of endearment among lovers.

C H A

one was placed in order, and a black pillar in cotton set by him. Taylor.

CHART. n. f. [charta, Lat.] A delineation or map of coasts, for the use of sailors. It is distinguished from a map, by representing only the coasts.

The Portuguese, when they had doubled the Cape of Good Hope, found Samuel Purchas, using astronomical instruments, geographical charts, and compasses. Abraham.

CHARTER. n. f. [charta, Latin.]

1. A charter is a written evidence of things done between man and man. Charters are divided into charters of the king, and charters of private persons. Charters of the king are those, whereby the king passeth any grant to any person or more, or to any body politick: as a charter of exemption, that no man shall be empannelled on a jury; charter of pardon, whereby a man is forgiven a felony, or other offence. Cocceus.

2. Any writing bestowing privileges or rights.

If you deny it, let the danger be Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shakespeare.
It is not to be wondered, that the great power whereby God bestowed the whole earth upon Adam, and confirmed it unto the sons of Noah, being a brief in word as large in effect, hath had much quarrel of interpretation. Drake.

Here was that charter sealed, wherein the crown
All marks of arbitrary power lays down. Dryden.
She shakes the rubbish from her mounting-brow,

And seems to have renew'd her charter's date,
Which heaven will to the death of time allow. Dryden.

God renewed this charter of man's liberty over the creatures. Shakespeare.

3. Privilege; immunity; exemption.

I must have liberty,
Withal as large a charter as the wind,
To blow on whom I please; for so fools have;
And they that are mould'ed with my folly,
They must must laugh. Shakespeare.

My mother,
Who has a charter to extol her blood,
When she does praise me, grieves me. Shakespeare.

CHARTER-PARTY. n. f. [cartre partie, Fr.]
A paper relating to a contract, of which each party has a copy.

Charter-parties, or contracts, made even upon the high sea, touching things that are not in the

C H A

own nature maritime, belong not to the admiral's jurisdiction. Hale.

CHARTERED. adj. [from charter.] Invested with privileges by charter; privileged.

When he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still. Shakespeare.

The flying stars, and light settor'd the day. Dryden.

To CHASE Metals. See To ENCHASE.

CHASE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Hunting; as, the pleasures of the chase.

2. Pursuit of any thing as game.
Whilst he was hunting in the chase, seems,
Of this fair couple, meets he on the way. Shakespeare.
The father of this seeming lady,
There is no chase more pleasant, methinks, than to drive a thought, by good conduct, from one end of the world to another, and never to lose sight of it till it fall into eternity. Barnet.

3. Fitness to be hunted; appropriation to chase or sport.

Concerning the beasts of chase, whereof the buck is the first, he is called the first year a fawn. Shakespeare.

A maid I am, and of thy virgin train;
Oh! let me still that spotless name retain.
Free and the fittest, try chase will obey,
And only make the beasts of chase my prey. Dryden.

4. Pursuit of an enemy, or of something noxious.

The admiral, with such ships only as could suddenly be put in readiness, made forth with them, and such as came daily to, we set upon them, and gave them chase. Bacon.

went cuncting about, rising to her left sense of things. Silva.
Hold, Warwick! seek thee out some other chase.

For I must put this deer to death. Shakespeare.
Honour's the noblest chase; pursue that game,
And recompense the loss of love with fame. Grange.

7: Open ground stored with such beasts as are hunted.

A receptacle for deer and game, of a middle nature between a forest and a park; being commonly less than a forest, and not enclosed with many liberties; and yet of a larger compass, and stored with greater diversity of game, than a park. A chase differs from a forest in this, because it may be in the hands of a subject, which a forest, in its proper nature, cannot; and from a park, in that it is not inclosed, and hath not only a larger compass, and more store of game, but likewise more keepers and overseers.

He and his lady both are at the lodge,
Upon the north side of this pleasant chase. Shakspeare

8. The CHASE of a gun, is the whole bore or length of a piece, taken withinside.

And taking chasse through our front. De Witt

CHASER. n. f. [from chasse.]

1. Hunter; pursuer; driver.

A stop it shall be, ere we are, anon
A rout, confusion thick. Shakspeare
So fast he flies, that his reviewing eye
Has lost the chaser, and his ear the cry. Dryden
Stretch'd on the lawn, his second-lap survey,
At once the chaser, and at once the prey!
Lo, Rut is, tugging at the deathly dart,
Bleeds in the forest like a wounded hart! Pope

2. An enchafer.

CHASM. n. f. [χάσμα.]

1. A breach unclosed; a cleft; a gap; an opening.

In that visible corporeal world, we see no chasms or gaps. Locke
The water of this orb commingles with that Of the ocean, by means of chasms and chasms chasms passing between it and the bottom of the ocean. De Witt
The ground about her riv'n mouth disparted, Horrible chasms profound. De Witt

2. A place unfilled; a vacancy.

Some say, chasms, that in the No pet on leaves to buy, or to be,

You should not pass here; nor, though it were as virtuous as to be chaste. Shakspeare

Make for a long time and love,
Which chaste flame is my eyes. De Witt

Success is not a long desert,
Which chaste in the channels ran,
And from our demi-gods began. Dryden

To CHASTEN. v. a. [castior, Fr. castigo, Lat.] To correct; to punish; to mortify.

Cast thy son while there is hope, and let not thy foul spirit for his crying. Proverbs

I follow thee, life guide! the path
Thou lead'st me, and to the hand of heav'n submit. Milton's Paradise Lost

However chast some feel the rod,
And own, like us, the father's *chast*ing hand. Roxe

From our lost pursuit the wills to hide
Her close decrees, and chasten human pride. Prior greater plenty, and may be proved by the old buildings in London, which were for the most part, of this timber; which is equal in value to the best oak, and,

for many purposes, far exceeds it, particularly for building vessels for liquors; it having a property, when once thoroughly seasoned, to maintain its bulk constantly, and is not subject to shrink or swell, like other timber.

2. The fruit of the chestnut-tree.

in parts; others to be read, but not curiously;
and some few to be read wholly, with attention.

To CHEW. v. n. To champ upon; to ruminate.

I will with patience hear, and find a time;
Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this.

Incubate the doctrine of disobedience, and then leave the multitude to chew upon it.

Old politicians chew on wisdom pills,
And blunder on in business to the last.

CHICANE. n. f. [chicane, Fr. derived by Menage from the Spanish word chico, little.]

1. The art of protracting a contest by petty objection and artifice.

The general part of the civil law concerns not the chicanes of private cases, but the affair and intercourse of civilized nations, grounded upon the principles of reason.

His attorneys have hardly one track left; they are at the end of all their chicanes.

2. Artifice in general. This sense is only in familiar language.

Unwilling then to aims to meet,
He strove to lengthen the campaign,
And gave his forces by chicanes.

To CHICANE. v. n. [chicaner, Fr.] To prolong a contest by tricks.

CHICANER. n. f. [chicaner, Fr.] A petty sophist; a trifling disputant; a wrangler.

This is the way to distinguish the two most different things I know, a logical chicaner and a man of reason.

CHICANERY. n. f. [chicanerie, Fr.] Sophis-
try; mean arts of wrangle.

His answer caused him to destroy the greatest part of these reports; and only to preserve the as discovered most of the chicanery and fraud of the practice.

CHICHES. n. f. See CHICKPEA.

CHICHLING VETCH. n. f. [lathyrus, Lat.]

In Germany they are cultivated, and eaten as peas, though neither so tender nor well tasted.

CHICK. n. f. [cicen, Sax. kiecken, chicken, Dutch. chicken, I believe,
the old plural of chick, though now used as a singular noun.]

1. The young of a bird, particularly of a hen, or small bird.

All my pretty ones!
Where, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,
At first began to play.

For when the shell is broke, out comes a chick.

While it is a chick, and hath no spurs, nor can not hurt, nor hath seen the motion, yet it ready pricks the air.

Even since she was a seven-night old, they say,
Was chaste and humble in her dying day;
Nor chick, nor hen, was known to disobey.

Having the notion that one laid the egg out of which the other was hatched, I have a clear idea of the relation of dam and chick.

On rainy days alone I dine,
Upon a chick and pint of wine
On rainy days I dine alone,
And pick my chicken to the bone.

2. A word of trivialness.

My Arick chick,
This is thy charge.

3. A term for a young girl.

Then, Chico, still go on to pray
Of thirty-six and thirty-eight;
Pursue your trade of scandal-picking,
Your hints, that break in no chicken.

CHICKENHEARTED, adj. [from chicken and heart.] Cowardly; timorous; fearful.

Now we set up for tilting in the pit,
Where 'tis agreed by bullock, chickenhearted,
To fight the ladies first, and then be parted.
Prologue to Spanish Friar.

CHICKENPOX, n. f. An exanthematous distemper, so called from its being of no very great danger.

CHICKLING, n. f. [from chick.] A small chick.

CHICKPEA, n. f. [from chick and pea.] A kind of degenerate pea. Miller.

CHICKWEED, n. f. [from chick and weed.] The name of a plant.

Green mint, or chickweed, are of good use in all the hard swellings of the breast, occasioned by milk. Wifeman.

CHIDE, v. a. pret. chid or chide, part. chid or chidden. [cf. chide, Sax.]

1. To reprove; to check; to correct with words: applied to persons.

Chide him for faults, and do it reverently,
When you perceive his blood includ'd to mirth. Shakespeare.

And fly like chidden Mercury from Jove. Shakespeare.

Those, that do teach your babes,
Do it with gentle means, and easy tasks;
He might have chid me for: for, in good sooth,
I am a child to chiding. Shakespeare.

Scylla wept,
And bid her barking waves into attention. Milton.

Above the waves as Neptune shew'd his face,
To chide the winds, and save the Trojan race. Waller.

You look, as if you been philosopher
Had just now chid you. Milton.

In any woman of better fashion in the parish Happ'd to be absent from church, they were fired of a visit from him, to chide and to dine with her. Swift.

2. To drive with reproof.

Margaret my queen, and Clifford too,
Have chid me from the battle. Shakespeare.

3. To blame; to reproach: applied to things.

Winds murmur'd through the leaves your long delay,
And faintains, o'er the pebbles, chid you fly. Deane.

I chid the folly of my thoughtless haire;
For the work perfected, the joy was pain. Pope.

CHIDE, v. n.

1. To clamour; to scold.

What had he to do to chide at me? Shakespeare.

Next morn, betimes, the bride was smiling:
The mother for un'd, the sister chide,
Where can this idle wench be hid? Shakespeare.

2. To quarrel with.

The humors of the state does him offence,
And he does chide with you. Shakespeare.

3. To make a noise.

My duty,
As doth a rock against the chiding flood,
Should the approach of this wild river break,
And stand unshaken yours. Shakespeare.

CHIDDER, n. f. [from chide.] A rebuker; a reprover.

Not he that chides, fir, at any hand, I pray—
I love no chiders, fir. Shakespeare.

CHIEF, adj. [chief, the head, Fr.]

1. Principal; most eminent; above the rest in any respect.

There were the chief of the officers that were over Solomon's works. King.

The hand of the princes and rulers hath been chief in this trespass. Isa.

Your country, chief in arms, abroad defend;
At home, with morals, arts, and laws amend. Deane.

2. Eminent; extraordinary.

A forward man soweth thine, and a whisperer

3. Capital; of the first order; that to which other parts are inferior; or subordinate.

I came to have a good general view of the apostle's main purpose in writing the epistle, and the chief branches of his discourse wherein he prosecuted it. Locke.

4. It is used by some writers with a superlative termination; but, I think, improperly: the comparative chiefer is never found.

We beseech you, bend you to remain
Here in the cheer and comfort of our eye,
Our chief counsellor, comfort, and our joy. Shakespeare.

Doeg an Edomite, the chief of the herdsmen.

He sometimes denied admission to the chief officers of the army. Clarendon.

CHIEF, n. f. [from the adjective]

1. A military commander; a leader of armies; a captain.

Is pain to them
Let's pray, let's be fled? or thou than they Let's hardy to endure: courageous chief! Milton.

The first in flight from pain
After or before were never known Such chiefs; as each an army seem'd alone. Deane.

A wit's a feather, and a chief a fool;
A noblest man's the noblest work of God. Pope.

A prudent chief in all ways must display
His powers in equal ranks, and in all ways
But with the occasion and the place comply,
Conceal his force, may seem sometimes to fly. Pope.

2. In CHIEF, in law. In capite, by personal service.

All fairs demandable, either for licence of anctuation to be made of lands holden in chief, or for the pardon of any such alienation already made without licence, have been stayed in the way to the lanpet. Black.

I shall be proud to hold my dependence on you in chief, as I do part of my small fortune in Worth. Deane.

3. In Spenser it seems to signify somewhat like achievement; a mark of distinction.

Where he the outways to the great fort there
The coloured chaplets wrought with a
The knottish rushings, and got totemay. Spenser.

4. In heraldry.

The chief is to called of the French word chef, the head or upper part: it is pointed to the third part of the escutcheon. Deane.

CHIEFDOM, n. f. [from chief.] Sovereignty. Not in use.

Zeal being in love with Colours, and setting her to wit, gave her to a device
chief and sovereignty of all flowers and herbs. Spenser.

CHIEFLESS, adj. [from chief.] Wanting a head; being without a leader.

And chiefless comes down out the company,
And naves yawnd for orders on the river. Deane.

CHIEFLY, adv. [from chief.] Principally; eminently; more than common.

A y man who will consider the nature of epic poetry, with notions it demands, and persons it requires, will find it inferior, with out a work full of chiefness. Deane.

Those parts of the kingdom, where the her and cities of the chiefness, chiefly lay. Deane.

CHIEFRIE, n. f. [from chief.] A small rent paid to the lord paramount.

They shall be well able to live up in their lands, to yield her in chiefly rational be Deane.

give a competent maintenance up to the gamblers, Spenser's Chiefrie.

Would the reserved rent at this day be any more than a small chiefrie? Spenser.

CHIEFTAIN, n. f. [from chief, n. f. captain.]

1. A leader; a commander.

That he'd then chieftain, for his safety's sake
(Their chieftain Humbre named was right)
Unto the mighty stream him to betake, Avenge be an end of battle and of life did make. Fairy Queen.

2. The head of a clan.

It broke, and absolutely subdued all the lords and chieftains of the Clutha. Deane.

CHIEFVANCE, n. f. [probably from achievement, French, purchase.] Traffick, in which money is extorted; as discounts, Obsolete.

There were good flows against chiefvance, the stead use of money; and against a fatal chance and exchange, which is a fatal duty. Deane.

CHIELBLEIN, n. f. [from chill, cold, and blain; so that Temple seems mistaken in his etymology, or has written it wrong to serve a purpose.] A fore made by frost.

I remembered the cure of chielblains when I was a boy (which may be called the children's grut) by burning it at the nose. Temple.

CHILD, n. f. in the plural children. [cf. child, Saxon]

1. An infant, or very young person.

Large, to which the word child is applied,
As for a boy, to turn a child again. Deane.

We should be kinder to one child than to another, than we are tender of one eye more than of the other. Deane.

The young lad must not be ventur'd abroad at eight or ten, for fear of what may happen to the tender child, though he then is ten times less able than at sixteen. Deane.

The stroke of death is nothing: children endure it, and the greatest cowards find it no pain. Deane.

2. One in the line of filiation, opposed to the parent.

When children have been expelled, or taken away young, and afterwards have approached to their parents' presence, the parents, though they have not known them, have had a secret joy, or other alteration, in their countenance. Deane.

The word child is a collective such as children, Deane.

Some have called her children as Deane.

There is more children than had more to Deane.

He, in his children, Deane.

The children of a man, how many to Deane.

He, in his children, Deane.

The children of a man, how many to Deane.

CHI

*Meredith, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples.* Shakspeare.

7. To be with CHILD. To be pregnant.
If it must stand still, let wives with child
Pray that their burthen may not fall this day,
Lest that there hopes prodigiously be cross'd.

Shakspeare.
To CHILD. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring children.

The spring the summer,
The chiding autumn, angry winter, change
Their wonted liveries. Shakspeare.

As to child ng women, young vigorous people, after irregularities of diet, in such it begins with hemorrhages. Arbuthnot.

CHI'LDBEARING. particip. subst. [from child and bear.] The act of bearing children.

To thee
Pains only in childbearing were foretold,
And, bringing forth, soon recompens'd with joy,
Fruit of thy womb. Milton.

The timorous and irresolute Sylvia has demurred till she is past childbearing. Adams.

CHI'LDBED. n. f. [from child and bed.]
The state of a woman bringing a child, or being in labour.

The funerals of prince Arthur, and of queen
Elizabeth, who died in childbed in the Tower.

Pure, as when wash'd from spot of childbed Ruin. Par. Reg.

Yet these, tho' poor, the pain of childbed bear.

Let no one be actually married, till she hath the childbed pillows. Spechtner.

Women in childbed are in the case of persons wounded. Arbuthnot on Diet.

CHI'LDBIRTH. n. f. [from child and birth.]
Travail; labour; the time of bringing forth; the act of bringing forth.

The mother of Pyrocles, after her childbirth, died. Sedary.

A kernel void of any taste, but not so of virtue, especially for women travelling in childbirth. Carew's Survey.

In the whole sex of women, God hath decreed the sharpest pains of childbed; to shew, that there is no state exempt from sorrow. Taylor.

He to his wife, before the time assign'd
For childbirth came, thus blunty spoke his mind.

Dryden.
CHI'LDED. adj. [from child.] Furnished with a child.

How light and portable my pain seems now,
When that which makes me bend, makes the king bow;

He childed as I father'd. Shakspeare.

CHI'LDERMAS DAY. [from child and mas.] The day of the week, throughout the year, answering to the day on which the feast of the Holy Innocents is solemnized, which weak and superstitious persons think an unlucky day.

To talk of hares, or such uncouth things, proves as ominous to the fisherman, as the un-giving of a sledge on the day when childermas day fell, doth to the mariner. Carew.

CHI'LDOOD. n. f. [from child; cildhad,
Saxon.]

1. The state of children; or, the time in which we are children: it includes infancy, but is continued to puberty.

Now I have binnd the child'hood of our joy
With blood, remov'd but little from our own.

Shakspeare.

The sons of lords and gentlemen should be trained up in learning from their childhoods.

Spenser on Ireland.

Seldom have I read to eye
Thy infancy, thy childhood, and thy youth. N. H.

CHI

The same authority that the actions of a man have with us in our childhood, the same, in every period of life has the practice of all whom we regard as our superiors. Rogers.

2. The time of life between infancy and puberty.

Infancy and childhood demand thin, copious, nourishing aliment. Arbuthnot.

3. The properties of a child.

Their love in early infancy began,
And rose as childhood ripen'd into man. Dryd.

CHI'LDISH. adj. [from child.]

1. Having the qualities of a child; trifling; ignorant; simple.

Learning hath its infancy, when it is but beginning and almost childish; then its youth, when it is luxuriant and juvenile. Bacon.

2. Becoming only children; trifling; puerile.

Musidorus being elder by three or four years,
there was taken away the occasion of childish contentions. Shin.

The lion's whelps she saw how he did bear,
And full in rugged arms withouten child's fear.

Spenser.

When I was yet a child, no childish play
To me was pleasing; all my mind was set Serious to learn and know. Par. Reg.

The fathers looked on the worship of images
as the most fitly and childish thing in the world.

Stillingfleet.

One that hath newly learn'd to speak and go Loves childish plays. R. J. m. m.

They have spoiled the walls with their child's sentences, that consist often in a jingle of words.

Adams on Italy.

By conversation the childish humours of their younger days might be worn out. Arbuthnot.

CHI'LDISHLY. adv. [from childish.] In a childish trifling way; like a child.

Together with his time their infamy was spread, who had so rashly and childishly cry'd him. Hector.

Some men are of excellent judgment in their own professions, but childishly unskillful in any thing besides. Hayward.

CHI'LDISHNESS. n. f. [from childish.]

1. Puerility; triflingness.

The actions of childishness, and unfashionable errings, time and age will of itself be sure to reform. Locke.

Nothing in the world could give a truer idea of the superstition, credulity, and childlike-ness of the Roman catholic religion. Adams.

2. Harmlessness.

Speak thou, boy;
Perhaps thy childlike-ness will move him more Than can our reason. Shakspeare.

CHI'LDESS. adj. [from child.] Without children; without offspring.

As thy sword hath made women childless, so shall thy mother be childless among women.

Samuel.

A man shall see the noblest works and foundations have proceeded from childless men; which have sought to express the images of their minds, where those of their bodies have failed; so the care of posterity is most in them, that have no posterity. Bacon's Essays.

Childless thou art, childless remain; so death
Shall be deceiv'd his glut. Milton.

She can give the reason why one died childless.

Spechtner.

CHI'LDLIKE. adj. [from child and like.]

Becoming or befitting a child.

Who can owe no less than childlike obedience to her that hath more than motherly care. Hood.

I thought the remnant of mine age
Should have been cherish'd by her childlike duty.

Shakspeare.

CHI'LID. n. f. [from χιλις.] A thousand; a collection or sum containing a thousand.

CHI

We make cycles and periods of years, as decades, centuries, millennia, for the use of comparison in history. Holler.

CHILIA'ERON. n. f. [from χιλις.] A

In a man, who speaks of a chilieraeron, or a body of a thousand sides, the idea of the figure may be very confused, though that of the number be very distinct. Locke.

CHILIFA'CTIVE. } adj. [from chyle. See

CHILIFA'CTORY. } CHYLIFACTIVE.]

That has the quality of making chyle.
Whether this be not effected by some way of corrosion, rather than any proper digestion, chilifa'ctive mutation, or alimental conversion.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

We should rather rely upon a chylifa'ctory me-strum, or digestive preparation drawn from species or individuals, whose stomachs peculiarly dissolve lapidaceous bodies. Brown.

CHILIFICATION. n. f. [See CHYLIFICA-
TION.] The act of making chyle.

Not will we affirm that iron is indigested in the stomach of the ostriche; but we suspect this effect to proceed not from any liquid reduction, or tendency to chylification, by the power of na-

CHILL. adj. [cele, Sax.]

1. Cold; that is cold to the touch.

And all my plants I save from nightly ill,
Of noisome winds, and blasting vapours chill.

M. H. A.

2. Cold; having the sensation of cold;
shivering with cold.

My heart and my chill veins freeze with despair. Rome.

3. Dull; not warm; not forward; as, a chill reception.

4. Depressed; dejected; discouraged.

5. Unaffectionate; cold of temper.

CHILL. n. f. [from the adjective.] Chil-ness; cold.

I very well know one to have a sort of chill about his pectorals and head. Deane.

To CHILL. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make cold.

Age has not yet
So shrunk my sinews, or to chill'd my veins,
But conscious virtue in my breast remains. Dick.
Heat burns his life, frost kills his tettering beams.

And vex the world with opposite extremes. Crash.
Each changing season does its poison bring;
Rheums chill the winter, agues blast the spring.

Prior.

Now no more the drum
Provokes to arms; or trumpet's clangor shrill
Affrights the wives, or chills the virgin's blood.

Philips.

2. To depress; to deject; to discourage.

Every thought on God chills the gusto of his spirits, and awakens terrors which he cannot bear.

Rogers.

3. To blast with cold.

The fruits perish on the ground,
Or soon decay, by snows immoderate chill'd;
By winds are blasted, or by lightning kill'd.

Blackmore.

CHILLINESS. n. f. [from chilly.] A sensation of shivering cold.

If the patient survives three days, the acuteness of the pain abates, and a chilliness or shivering affects the body. Arbuthnot.

CHILLY. adj. [from chill.] Somewhat cold.

A chilly sweat bedews
My mudd'ring limbs. Philips.

CHILNESS. n. f. [from chill.] Coldness want of warmth.

If you come out of the sun suddenly into shade, there followeth a chilness or shivering in all the body. Bacon.

CHI

This while he thinks, he lifts aloft his darts,
A generous chimera folds every part,
The veins pour back the blood, and fortify the heart.
Dryden.

CHIME. n. f. [Chime, Dutch.] The end of a barrel or tub.

CHIME. n. f. (The original of this word is doubtful. Junius and Minsheu suppose it corrupted from cimbal; Skinner from gamme, or gamut; Henshaw, from chiamare, to call, because the chime calls to church. Perhaps it is only softened from chime, or churm, an old word for the sound of many voices, or instruments making a noise together.)

1. The consonant or harmonick sound of many correspondent instruments.

Hang our shaggy thighs with bells?

That as we do strike a tune,

In our dance shall make a chime. Ben Jonson.

The sound
Of instruments, that made melodious chime,
Was heard, of harp and organ. Milton.

Love virtue, she alone is free;
She can teach you how to climb
Higher than the sphery chime. Milton.

2. The correspondence of sound.

Love had invented verse, and form'd the thime,

The motion measur'd, harmonis'd the chime. Dryden.

3. The sound of bells, not rung by ropes, but struck with hammers. In this sense it is always used in the plural, chimes.
We have heard the chimes at midnight. Shakspeare.

4. The correspondence of proportion or relation.

The conceptions of things are placed in their several degrees of similitude; as in several proportions, one to another; in which harmonious chimes, the voice of reason is often drowned. Gray.

To CHIME. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To found in harmony or consonance.

To make the rough recital aptly chime,
On being the sum of Galila's lols to rhyme,
'Tis mighty hard. Prior.

2. To correspond in relation or proportion.

Father and son, husband and wife, and such other relative terms, do belong one to another, and, through custom, do readily chime, and answer one another, in people's memories. Leke.

3. To agree; to fall in with.

He not only sat quietly and heard his father rallied at, but often chimed in with the discourse.
Archbald's Hist. of John Bull.

4. To suit with; to agree.

Any felt, whose reasonings, interpretation, and language, I have been used to, will, of course, make all chime that way; and make another, and perhaps the genuine meaning of the author seem harsh, strange, and uncouth to me.
Locke.

5. To jingle; to clatter.

But with the meaner tribe I'm forc'd to chime,
And, wanting strength to rise, descend to rhyme.
Smith.

To CHIME. v. a.

1. To move, or strike, or cause to sound harmonically, or with just consonancy.

With lifted arms they order ev'ry blow,
And chime their sounding hammers in a row:
With labour'd anvil Rana groans below. Dryden.

2. To strike a bell with a hammer.

CHIME'RA. n. f. [Chimera, Lat.] A vain and wild fancy, as remote from reality as the existence of the poetical Chimera, a monster feigned to have the head of a lion, the belly of a goat, and the tail of a dragon.

In these, the force of dreams is of a piece,
Chimeras all, and more absurd, or less. Dryden.

No body joins the voice of a sheep with the shape of a horse, to be the complex ideas of any real substance, unless he has a mind to fill his head with chimeras, and his discourse with unintelligible words. Locke.

CHIME'RAL. adj. [from chimera.] Imaginary; fanciful; wildly, vainly, or fantastically conceived; fantastick.

Notwithstanding the fineness of this allegory my store for it in some measure, I cannot think that persons of such a chimerical existence are proper actors in an epic poem. Spectator.

CHIME'RICAL. adv. [from chimerical.] Vainly; wildly; fantastically.

CHI'MINAGE. n. f. [from chimn, an old law word for a road.] A toll for passage through a forest. Cowell.

The night has been unruly: where we lay,
Our chimneys were blown down. Shakspeare.

3. The fire-place.

The chimney

Is south the chamber, and the chimney-piece, Crack'd down bathing. Shakspeare.

The fire which the Chaldeans worshipp'd as a god, is crept into every man's chimney. Ruler.

Low offices, which some neighbours rashly think it worth stirring from their chimney fires to obtain. Swift on Sat. Epst.

CHIMNEY-CORNER. n. f. [from chimney and corner.] The fire-side; the seat on each end of the fire-grate: usually noted in proverbial language for being the place of idlers.

Yet some of men

Tell stories of you in their chimney-corner. Doddington.

CHIMNEYPIECE. n. f. [from chimney and piece.] The ornamental piece of wood, or stone, that is set round the fire-place.

Perth and Brighton the marble tablets and chimney spaces with a clout dip in grate. Swift.

CHIMNEYSWEEPER. n. f. [from chimney and sweeper.]

1. One whose trade it is to clean foul chimnies of soot.

To look like her, are chimney-sweepers black;
And since her time are colliers counted bright. Shakspeare.

The little chimney-sweeper skulks along,
And marks with sooty stains the herald's throng. Gay.

Even lying Ned, the chimney-sweeper of Savoy, and Tom the Portugal dustman, put in their claims. Archbald.

2. It is used proverbially for one of a mean and vile occupation.

Golden lads and girls, all must,
As chimney-sweepers, come to dull. Shakspeare.

CHIN. n. f. [chin, Sax. chin, Germ.] The part of the face beneath the under lip.

But all the words I could get of her, was wiping her waist, and thrusting out her chin. Swift.

With his Amazonian chin he drove
The twisted lips before him. Shakspeare.

He rais'd his hardy head, which sunk again,
And basking on his bosom, knock'd his chin. Dryden.

CHI

CHI'NA. n. f. [from China, the country where it is made.] China ware; porcel-lain; a species of vessels made in China, dimly transparent, partaking of the qualities of earth and glass. They are made by mingling two kinds of earth, of which one easily vitrifies; the other resists a very strong heat: when the vitrifiable earth is melted into glass, they are completely burnt.

Spleen, vapours, or small-pox above them all;
And millions of herself, tho' china fall. Pope.

After supper, carry your plate and china together in the same basket. Swift.

CHINA-ORANGE. n. f. [from China and orange.] The sweet orange: brought originally from China.

Not many years has the china-orange been propagated in Portugal and Spain. Mortimer.

CHI'NA-ROOT. n. f. [from China and root.] A medicinal root, brought originally from China.

CHI'NCOUGH. n. f. [perhaps more properly kinough, from kin, to pant, Dutch, and cough.] A violent and convulsive cough, to which children are subject.

He prefer'd her with the tusk's head,
And chine with rising bristles roughly spread. Dryden.

2. A piece of the back of an animal.

Cut out the lumpy loured clown in chinas of beef ere thou sleep. Shakspeare.

He had killed eight fat hogs for this reason, and he had eat about his chinas very liberally amongst his neighbours. Spectator.

To CHINE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut into chines

He that in his line did chine the long ill-d Appene. Dryden.

CHINK. n. f. [cinan, to gape, Sax.] A small aperture longwise; an opening or gap between the parts of any thing.

Pyramus and Thisbe did talk through the chink
of a wall. Shakspeare.

Plagues also have been raised by anointing the chinks of doors, and the like. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Though birds have no epiglottis, yet they to contract the chink of their larynx, as to prevent the admission of wet or dry ingested. Brown.

Other inventions, false and absurd, that are like so many chinks and holes to discover the rot-tiness of the whole fabric. Scott.

In vain the sea did each cranny of the house,
Each gaping chink impervious to a mouse. Swift.

To CHINK. v. a. [derived by Skinner from the noun.] To shake so as to make a found.

He chink his purse, and takes his seat of state;
With ready quills the dedicatory wait. Pope.

To CHINK. v. n. To found by striking each other.

Lord Stuart's money shines as bright, and chink as well, as liquor South's. Archbald.

When not a guinea chink'd on Martin's boards,
And Atwell's cell was drain'd of all his hoards. Swift.

CHIN'KY. adj. [from chink.] Full of holes; gaping; opening into narrow clefts.

C H I

But plaster thou the chinky hives with clay
Dryden's Virg.
 Grimalkin, to domestic vermin sworn
 An exulting foe, with watchful eye

 Wrap my cold limbs, and shade my face
P.
CHIRPINE n. f. [from chopin, Span.]
 A high shoe, formerly worn by ladies.
 Your ladyship is ready to chirp with me
 Saw you list, by the attitude of each foot
Scott

The woman was a grantea, and yet wild
 Always in chippin.
CHIP, CHEAP, CHIPPING, in the names of places, imply a market; from the Saxon cýpan, ceapan, to buy. Gibson
TO CHIP v. a. [probably corrupted from chip.] To cut into small pieces; to diminish, by cutting away a little at a time.
 His mangled myrmidons,
 N' fates, hounds, hawks, and chips, came to him.
 Cryed out all at once, a chip of chips.
 To return to our statue, the block of marble
 They were labouring on, only began to be chipped, sometimes rough hewn, and still the chip
 of an uncut figure.
 The chip is cut out of the stone, and
 And his eye to the hammer, this chip.
 And they Taught him to chip the wood, and hew the stone
Thomson

CHIP n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. A small piece taken off by a cutting instrument.
 Carpenters do extremely adroitly, and cut off the chips, which are used for building.
 That chip made from swan, not by power.
 The chip was laid below,
 Of chips and fern, and was the chip.
Dryden's Fables

2. A small piece, however made.
 The mangle lies in the vein in lumps wrecked, in an irregular manner, among chips, spar, and chips.
Woodward

CHIPPING n. f. [from To chip.] A fragment cut off.
 They dug their land with the chipping of a sort of chip.
Scott's Herford

The chipping and flings of these jewels, could they be preserved, are of more value than the wisdom of many chips.
Scott

CHIRAGRICAL adj. [from chiragra, Lat.]
 Having the gout in the hand; subject to the gout in the hand.

Chiragra is persons do suffer in the fingers as well as in the rest, and sometimes both of them.
Dr. Keil's Vulgar Errors

CHIROGRAPHER n. f. [from chiro, the hand, and graphein, to write.] He that exercises or professes the art or business of writing.
 It is possible to form this office to the chiro- grapher to be engaged.
Racine

CHIROGRAPHER n. f. [See CHIRO- GRAPHER.] This word is used in the following passage, I think improperly, for one that tell fortunes by examining the hand: the true word is chiroscopist, or chironomer.

Let the chiroscopist examine his features;
 let the chironomer behold his palm; but, above all, let us consult for the evaluation of his nativity.
Richardson and Pope

C H I

CHIROGRAPHY n. f. [See CHIROGRA-
PHER.] The art of writing.

CHIRONOMANCY n. f. [See CHIRONOMANCY.]
 One that foretells future events by inspecting the hand.

The middle fort, who have not much to spare,
 To chironomers cheaper art repair,
 Who clip the pretty palm, to make the lines more fair.
Dryden's Juvenal

CHIRONOMANCY n. f. [χίρς, the hand, and μαντεία, a prophet.] The art of foretelling the events of life, by inspecting the hand.

There is not much considerable in that doctrine, which is only that lines in the top of the palm do signify a long life; in the middle, a short; and at the bottom, events to come.
Brady's Vulgar Errors

TO CHIRP v. n. [perhaps contracted from chirp.] The Dutch have chirp- en. To make a cheerful noise; as birds, when they call without singing.

She chirped as she was passing the way,
 I heard by them betide, and she did star.

Come he might now to sing a chirp's note;
 And think he that the chirp of a wren
 Can chase away the most depressed mood.

No chirp link the welkin's chirp chirp.
Scott's Poems

The chirp of the Calls all for chirp to go around.

TO CHIRP v. a. [This seems apparently corrupted from cheer up.] To make cheerful.

I chirped for light, and think it a sin
 To chirp on the chirp and moderate bottle.
Johnson

Sir Belam now, he chirped after folks;
 He chirped his chirp and chirped his chirp.
Pope

CHIRP n. f. [from the verb.] The voice of birds or insects.

We do over us, and chirp by us, and chirp,
 And chirp went the chirp and chirp under our feet.
Scott's Poems

CHIRPER n. f. [from chirp.] One that chirps; one that is cheerful.

TO CHIRP v. n. [See chirp, Sax.] See CHIRP. To coo as a pigeon. Junius

CHIRURGEON n. f. [from chir, the hand, and urgeon, work.] One that cures ailments, not by internal medicines, but outward applications.
 It is now generally pronounced, and by many written, surgeon.

When a man's wounds cease to smart, only because he has lost his feeling, they are nevertheless mortal, for his not feeling his need of a chir- urgeon.
Scott's Sermon

CHIRURGERY n. f. [from chirurgion.]
 The art of curing by external applications. This is called surgery.

Gynecists having skill in chirurgery, as yet in these days much esteemed.

Nature could do nothing in her case without the help of chirurgery, in drying up the luxurious flesh, and making way to pull out the rotten bones.
Johnson

CHIRURGICAL adj. See CHIRUR- GERY.

1. Having qualities useful in outward applications to hurts.

As to the chirurgical or physical virtues of wax, it is reckoned a mean between hot and cold.

2. Relating to the manual part of healing.
 3. Manual in general, consisting in operations of the hand. This sense, though the first according to etymology, is now scarce found.

C H I

The chirurgical or manual part doth refer to the making instruments, and exercising practice by experiments.

CHISEL n. f. [ciseau, Fr. of scissum
 Lat.] An instrument with which wood or stone is pared away.

What fine chisel?
 Could ever yet cut breath? Let no man mock me
 For I will kiss her.

There is such a seeming softness in the limb,
 as if not a chisel had hewed them out of stone,
 but a pencil had drawn and streaked them in.
Harte

Imperfect shapes: in marble such are seen,
 When the rude chisel does the man begin.
TO CHISEL v. a. [from the noun.] To cut with a chisel.

CHIT n. f. [according to Dr. Hick-from kind, Germ. child; perhaps from chico, little, Span.]

1. A child; a baby: generally used of young persons in contempt.

They will appear such chits in story,
 Two or three old fellows to jest.

2. The shoot of corn from the end of the grain. A cant term with millers.

Bolus, a curved bar of iron, with which to the chit at the root-end.

3. A fickle. [from chuckpea.] In this sense it is seldom used.

TO CHIT v. n. [from the noun.] To sprout; to shoot at the end of the grain: cant.

I have known barley chit in seven hours, at
 it had been sown forth.

CHITCHAT n. f. [corrupted by redupcation from chat.] Prattle; idle pra-tle talk. A word only used in ludicrous conversation.

I am a member of the female society, who ourselves the chit-chat club.

CHITTLINGS n. f. without singular.
 [from schysterling, Dut. Muskeu; fr.
kuteln, Germ. Skinner.] The gut
 the bowels. Skinner.

CHITTY adj. [from chit.] Childish
 like a baby.

CHIVALROUS adj. [from chivalry.] Relating to chivalry, or errant knighthood; warlike; adventurous; dani-
 Out of use.

And noble wounds at yore allied were
 To the pursuit of chivalrous empire.

CHIVALRY n. f. [chevalerie, Fr. knighthood, from cheval, a horse;
eques in Latin. It ought properly be written chevalry. It is a word much used, but in old poems romances.]

1. Knighthood; a military dignity.

There be now, for martial encouragement, degrees and orders of chivalry; which never less, are conferred promiscuously upon soldiers and nobles.

2. The qualifications of a knight;
 valour, dexterity in arms.

Thou hast slain
 The flower of Europe for his chivalry.
 I may speak it to my shame.

I have a traitor born to chivalry.
 Sublimely he swears,

That, by the fish which knights to knight bore,

And what'er else to chivalry belongs,
He would not cease till he reveng'd their wrongs.
Dryd. n.

4. An adventure; an exploit. Not in use.
They four doing acts more dangerous, though less famous, because they were but private chivalry.
Sidney

5. The body or order of knights.
And by his light
Did all the chivalry of England move
To do brave acts. Shallspence.

6. In law.
Servitium militare, of the French chevalier; a tenure of land by knight's service. There is no land but is holden immediately or immediately of the crown, by some service or other; and therefore are all our freeholds, that are to us and our heirs, called feudal, fees, as proceeding from the benefit of the king. As the king gave to the nobles large possessions for this or that rent and service, so they parcelled out their lands, so received for rents and services, as they thought good; and those services are by Littleton divided into chivalry and socage. The one is martial and military; the other, clownish and rustic.
Chivalry, therefore, is a tenure of service, whereby the tenant is bound to perform some military office unto his lord, and is of two sorts; either regal, that is, such as may hold only of the king; or such as may also hold of a common person as well as of the king. That which may hold only of the king, is properly called knightancy; and is again divided into grand or petty, i. e. great or small. Chivalry that may hold of a common person, as well as of the king, is called feutagium. Cowell.

CHIVES. n. f. [chive, Fr. Skinner.]

1. The threads or filaments rising in flowers with seeds at the end.
The masculine of pistone feed contained in the chives or apices of the thiamus. Key

2. A species of small onion. Skinner.
CHLOROSIA. n. f. [from χλωρός, green.]
The greenickness.

TO CHOK. See CHOK.

CHO'COLATE. n. f. [chocolate, Span.]

1. The nut of the cacao or cocoa tree.
The tree hath a rare flower, of a great number of petals, from whence cometh forth a pistone, being a tube cut into many parts, which becomes a fruit shaped somewhat like cucumber, and deeply furrowed, in which are contained several seeds, collected into an oblong heap, and flat down, somewhat like diamonds. It is a native of America, and is found in great plenty in several places between the tropicks, and grows wild. See COCOA. Nitche.

2. The cake or mass, made by grinding the kernel of the cacao nut with other substances, to be dissolved in hot water.
The Spaniards were the first who brought chocolate into use in Europe, to promote the consumption of their cucumbers, clove, and other drugs, when their West Indies furnish, and which enter the composition of chocolate.
Cowell.

3. The liquor made by a solution of chocolate in hot water.
Chocolate is certainly much the best of these three exotic liquors; its oil seems to be both rich, alimentary, and anodyne. Chalmer.
In fumes of burning chocolate shall glow,
And tremble at the sea that froths below. Pope

CHO'COLATE-HOUSE. n. f. [chocolate and house.] A house where company is entertained with chocolate.
Ever since that time, London has been twice a day at the chocolate-house. Tatler.

And Jacob was wroth, and chode with Laban.
Genesis.

CHOICE. n. f. [choix, French.]

1. The act of choosing; determination between different things proposed; election.

If you oblige me suddenly to chuse,
The choice is made; for I must both refuse. Dryd.
Soft diction doth thy style renown,
Gentle or sharp, according to thy choice,
To laugh at follies, or to lash at vice. Dryden.

2. The power of choosing; election.
Choice there is not, unless the thing which we take be so in our power, that we might have refused it. If we consume the blade, it chooses not to do, because the nature thereof is such that it can do no other. Hobbes.

There's no liberty like the freedom of having;
it is my own choice, whether I will live to the world, or to myself. Leffing.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice. Whereas, all moral good acts consist in the elective act of the understanding will.
Grew's Cypripedium Sacra.

Whether he will remove his contemplation from one idea to another, is many times in his choice. Locke.

3. Care in choosing; curiosity of distinction.

Julius Cæsar did write a collection of applaudimenta; it is pity his book is lost; for I imagine they were collected with judgment and care. Raoul's Apollonius.

4. The thing chosen; the thing taken, or approved, in preference to others.

Your choice is not rich in both is better;
That you might well enjoy her. Shallspence.
Take to thee, from among the cherubs,
Thy choice of flaming warours. Milton.

Now, Mars, the laid, let fame exalt her voice,
Nor let thy conquests only be her choice. Pope.

5. The best part of anything, that is more properly the object of choice.

The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the Philos. do both more briefly contain, and more movingly also express. Hobbes.

To want a mighty prince in the choice of our repulches be a thy dear. Genesis.
Thou riders, tread with care
Of many provinces, from bound to bound. Milton.

6. Several things proposed at once, as objects of judgment and election.

A heavier choice of than his spirit
Did never float upon the swelling tide. Shelley.

7. To make CHOICE of. To choose; to take from several things proposed

With an of what he best approves, makes his
Not isled out, as the common voice. Dryden.

CHOICE. adj. [choisi, French.]

1. Select; of extraordinary value.

After long let before the king, choice of wines and fruits, he shall have the best part of his entertainment was to come. Chalmer.
Thus in a sea of folly tosh'd,
My choice of hours of life are lost. Shelley.

2. Chary; frugal; careful: used of persons.

He that is choice of his time, will also be choice
of his company, and choice of his actions.
Taylor's Holy Love.

CHO'ICELESS. adj. [from choice.] Without the power of choosing; without right of choice; not free.

Neither the weight of the matter of which the cylinder is made, nor the round, which is form of it, are any more imputable to it, than choiceless creature, than the will motion of it; and, therefore, it cannot be a bit relatable to these the reconcilableness of fire with choice. Hammill.

CHO'ICEELY. adv. [from choice.]

1. Curiously; with exact choice.
A kind of men,
Collected choice from each county some. Shallspence.

2. Valuably; excellently.
It is certain it is choice good. Walter's Arg.

CHO'ICELESS. n. f. [from choice.] Nicety; particular value.

Carry into the shade such strictures, seedlings, or plants, as are for their choiceless selected in poes. Excerpt's Kallipolis.

CHOIR. n. f. [chorus, Latin.]

1. An assembly or band of singers.
They now sing the choir.
Of angels, would it force admire. Waller.

2. The singers in divine worship.
The choir,
With all the church music of the kingdom,
To sing long Te Deum. Shallspence.

3. The part of the church where the chorists or singers are placed.

To prepare place in the choir, tell off
At distance from her. Shallspence.

TO CHOKE. v. a. [aceoacan, Sax. from ceoca, the cheek or mouth. According to Minsheu, from צח; whence, probably, the Spanish abogar]

1. To suffocate; to kill by stopping the passage of respiration.
But when to my good lord I prove worthy,
I'll choke myself. Shallspence.

While you understand, clouds of dust did choke Contending troops. Waller.

2. To stop up; to obstruct; to block up a passage.
Mist would up to the king's capacious court,
While perils were crowded with them. Chalmer.

They are of a continual expense to clear the city, and to keep it in long choke, by the stop of the air. Chalmer.

While plays and tears his dead and pig's face. Shelley.

And clouds of mourners choke their fastenings way. Shelley.

3. To hinder by obstruction or confinement.

As two spent swimmers, that do cling together,
And sink together. Shallspence.
She cannot love her perfect power to fly,
Two in its and clouds do choke her wandering light. Chalmer.

It is a great fire, as to choke are the able to remove the stone. Chalmer.

You must make the mould big enough to contain the whole that, when it is grown to the quantity for the year, will be the seed of the next year. Chalmer.

The fire, which choke the stones, is
A load too heavy for his back to bear, Whose upward blown below, and blown down by fire. Chalmer.

4. To suppress.

And yet we ventral; for the new presented, the new choke is a new choke.
Choke the new choke is a new choke.
For to draw each out, with a new choke,
Cannot come, as the new choke, choke.
The new choke is a new choke. Shallspence.

5. To overpower.

And that which fell among them, as they,
which, when they have been, go to, and are choke the stones, and are, the pleasures of this life, and being not in the choke. Chalmer.

No more, as the choke holds its turn,
But cats and dogs, and the choke corn. Dryden.

circle. Tatler.

7. Any series ending as it begins, and perpetually repeated.

There be fruit trees in hot countries, which have blossoms and young fruit, and young fruit and ripe fruit, almost all the year, succeeding one another; but this circle of ripening can be but in succulent plants, and hot countries. Bacon.

Thus in a circle runs the peasant's pain,
And the year rolls within itself again. Dryden.

8. An inconclusive form of argument, in which the foregoing proposition is proved by the following, and the following proposition inferred from the foregoing.

To a heavy body descend by gravity; and again, that gravity is a quality whereby an heavy body descend, is an imperfect circle, and therefore nothing. to Aristotle's Sciences.

That fancy called a circle, is when one of the premises in an argument is questioned and opposed, and we intend to prove it by the conclusion. Harris' Logic.

9. Circumlocution; indirect form of words.

Has he given the lye
In circle or oblique, or femicircle,
Or direct parallel? You must challenge him.

Farther's Q. of Cer.

10. CIRCLES of the German empire. Such provinces and principalities as have a right to be present at diets. They are in number ten. Trevoux.

Roasted in wrath and fire, And thus o'erlaid with coagulate gore. Shaksp. Vivification ever consisteth in spirits attenuate, which the cold doth congeal and coagulate. Bacon's Natural History.

Bittern is found in lumps, or coagulated masses, in some springs. Woodward's Nat. Hist. The milk in the stomach of calves, which is coagulated by the rennet, is again dissolved and rendered fluid by the gall in the duodenum. Atkins.

TO COAGULATE. v. n. To run into concretions, or congelations.

Spirit of wine commixed with milk, a third part spirit of wine, and two parts milk, coagulate little, but mingleth; and the spirit swims not above. Bacon.

About the third part of the oil olive, which was driven over into the receiver, did there co-gulate into a whitish body, almost like butter. Boyle.

COAGULATION. n. f. [from coagulare.]

1. Concretion; congelation; the act of coagulating; the state of being coagulated.

2. The body formed by coagulation.

As the substance of coagulations is not merely saline, nothing dissolves them but what penetrates and relaxes at the same time. Abraham.

COAGULATIVE. adj. [from coagulare.]

That has the power of causing concretions, or coagulation.

To manifest the coagulative power, we have sometimes in a minute arrested the fluidity of new milk, and turned it into a curdled substance, only by extremely mingling with it a few drops of good oil of vitriol. Boyle.

COAGULATOR. n. f. [from coagulare.]

That which causes coagulation.

Coagulators of the humours, are those things which expel the most fluid parts, as in the case of masticating, or thickening; and by those things which suck up some of the fluid parts, as absorbents. Abraham.

COAL. n. f. [col, Sax. kol, Germ. kole, Dut. kul, Danish.]

1. The common fossil fuel.

Coal is a black, sulphureous, inflammable matter, dug out of the earth, serving for fuel, common in Europe, though the English coal is of most repute. One species of pit-coal is called canal, or canal coal, which is found in the northern counties; hard, glossy, and light, apt to cleave into thin flakes, and, when kindled, yields a continual blaze till it be burnt out. Chambers.

Coals are solid, dry, opaque, inflammable substances, found in large flats, lying horizontally more easily than in any other direction; of a glossy hue, soft and friable, not fusible, but easily inflammable, and leaving a large residuum of ash. Hellon Fossils.

But they, contrived, talk by her own consent, As come to ashes, when the spirit's spent. Dryden.

We shall meet with the same mineral lodged in coals, that elsewhere we found in marble. Woodward's Natural History.

2. The cinder of scorched wood; charcoal.

Whichever doth so alter a body, as it returns the not again to that it was, may be called a true metamorphosis, when there is made of coal, or cinder of wood, or bricks of earth. Bacon.

3. Fire; any thing inflamed or ignited.

You are no fire, no, Than is the coal on which you sit. Shaksp.

On habitations in the fair, You have blown this coal betwixt my lord and me. Shaksp.

The rage of jealousy then kind his soul, And his face kindled like a burning coal. Dryden.

TO COAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To burn wood to charcoal.

Add the timber's care and skill in buying the wood for this service; tellings, felling, and piling it to be burnt, in fetching the same, when it is cooled, through such fur, foul, and cumbersome ways. Carter's Survey of London.

Charcoal of sorts, cooled into great pieces, lasts longer than ordinary charcoal. Bacon.

2. To delineate with coal.

Marsaling, he cooled out thymes upon the wall, near to the picture. Carter.

COAL-BLACK. adj. [from coal and black.] Black in the highest degree; of the colour of coal.

Coal stone flames easily, and burns freely; it holds and endures the fire much longer than coal. Wood.

COAL-WORK. n. f. [from coal and work.] A coalery; a place where coal is found.

There is a vast treasure in the old galls, from whence authors may draw countless supplies; as our officers make their succour come from the coal and the mines. Voltaire.

COALFIELD. n. f. [from coal.] A place where coal is dug.

Two fine flint-stones were found lying on a black stone, at a deserted seat in Bowel. Wood.

TO COALESCE. v. n. [from coalesco, Latin.]

1. To unite in masses by a spontaneous approximation to each other.

When vapours are raised, they hinder not the true agency of the sun, being divided into parts too small to cause any reflection in their superficies; but when they begin to coalesce, and combine into holes, those globules become of a convenient size to reflect some colour. Newton.

2. To grow together; to join.

COALESCE. n. f. [from coalesco.] The act of coalescing; concretion; union.

COALITION. n. f. [from coalitio, Latin.] Union in one mass or body; conjunction of separate parts in one whole.

The word is a mist of a coagulation, a coalescence, and even part of a coalescence of different things. Clarendon.

In coalescence of a people, their perfect union is the end, and the coalescence is the means. Hume.

The word is that the coalescence of things should be a coalescence, and not a great incoherence, and the coalescence should be a coalescence. Bacon.

COALY. adj. [from coal.] Containing coal.

A coaly, and a coaly, and a coaly. Milton.

COAPTATION. n. f. [from con and aptio, Lat.] The adjustment of parts to each other.

In a clock, the hand is moved upon the dial, the clock struck, and the other actions belonging to the engine are performed, by virtue of the fixed shape, figure, and disposition of the several parts. Boyle.

The same method makes both prose and verse beautiful, which consists in the judicious disposition and ranging of the words. Bacon.

TO COARCT. v. a. [from coarct, Latin.]

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

COGNITIVE. adj. [from cognitus, Latin.]

Having the power of knowing.

Unless the understanding employ and exercise its cognitive or apprehensive power about these terms, there can be no actual apprehension of them.

South's Sermons.

COGNIZABLE. adj. [from cognoscibile, Fr.]

1. That falls under judicial notice.

2. Liable to be tried, judged, or examined. Some are merely of ecclesiastical cognizance; others of a mixed nature, such as are cognizable both in the ecclesiastical and secular courts.

Argy's Parergon.

COGNIZANCE. n. f. [from cognissance, French.]

1. Judicial notice; trial; judicial authority.

It is worth the while, however, to consider how we may discountenance and prevent those evils which the law can take no cognizance of.

L'Estrange.

Happiness or misery, in converse with others, depends upon things which human laws can take no cognizance of.

South.

The moral crime is completed, there are only circumstances wanting to work it up for the cognizance of the law.

Edgerton.

2. A badge, by which any one is known.

And at the king's going away the car's servants stood, in a friendly manner, in their lively coats, with cognizances, ranged on both sides, and made the king a bow.

Darwin.

These were the proper cognizances and ornaments of the tribes.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

COGNOMINAL. adj. [from cognomen, Lat.]

Having the same name.

Nor do those animals more resemble the creatures on earth, than they on earth; the confabulations which pass under animal names in heaven, nor the dog-bark at sea much more make out the dog's bark than his cognominal or name-like the heavens.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

COGNOMINATION. n. f. [from cognomen, Lat.]

1. A surname; the name of a family.

2. A name added from any accident or quality.

Pompey deserved the name Great: Alexander, of the same cognomination, was generalissimo of the east.

Brown.

TO COHERE. v. n. [from coherere, Lat.]

1. To stick together; to hold fast one to another, as parts of the same mass.

Two pieces of marble, having their surface exactly planed, and applied to each other in such a manner as to intercept the air, do cohere firmly together as one.

Hall's Journal.

We find that the force, whereby bodies cohere, is very much greater when they come to immediate contact, than when they are at ever so small a finite distance.

Chad's Philo. Prim.

None want a place, for all, their entire bound, Hung to the gods, and earth's around;

Not chosen, or in our conglutination, are then

The hazy spheres about the dusky queen.

Pope.

2. To be well connected; to follow regularly in the order of discourse.

3. To suit; to fit; to be fitted to.

Had time served with place, or place with wishing.

Shakespeare.

4. To agree.

COHERENCE. n. f. [from coherencia, Latin.]

COHERENCY. n. f. [from coherencia, Latin.]

1. That state of bodies in which their parts are joined together, from what cause soever it proceeds, so that they resist division and separation; nor can be separated by the same force by which they might be simply moved, or, being only laid upon one another, might be parted again.

Quincy.

The pressure of the air will not explain, it can be a rule of the coherence of the particles of a solid body.

L'Estrange.

Matter is either fluid or solid; we do not comprehend the middle degrees between extreme hardness and softness, and the most capillary to the vacuum.

Newton.

2. Connexion; dependency; the relation of parts or things one to another.

It shall be no trouble to find each controversy's resting-place, and the coherence of both with things, those on which it depends, or which depend on it.

Huckle, Preface.

Why between firmness and faith should there be continuity that coherence, which causes move with their usual effects.

Huckle.

3. The texture of a discourse, by which one part follows another regularly and naturally.

4. Consistency in reasoning, or relating, so that one part of the discourse does not destroy or contradict the rest.

Coherence of discourse, and a direct tendency of all the parts of it to the argument in hand, is most eminently to be found in Latin.

L'Estrange.

COHERENT. adj. [from coherens, Latin.]

1. Sticking together, so as to resist separation.

By coagulating and distilling, that is, making their parts more or less coherent.

Boyle.

Where all must fall, or not coherent, be; And all that rises, rise in due degree.

Pope.

2. Connected; united.

The mind proceeds from the knowledge it stands possessed of already, to that which lies next, and is coherent to it, and so on to what it aims at.

L'Estrange.

3. Suitable to something else; regularly adapted.

Instruct my daughter,

That time and place, with this deceit to law, May prove coherent.

Shakespeare.

4. Consistent; not contradictory to itself.

A coherent thinker, and a truth-reveler, is not to be made of wood by a lot of rules.

Watts.

COHESION. n. f. [from cohere, Lat.]

1. The act of sticking together.

Hard particles, besides their touch in a few points, and must be by some by felt force than breaks a solid particle, whose parts touch in all the space between them, without any pores or interstices to weaken their cohesion.

Newton.

Solids and fluids differ in the degree of cohesion, which, being increased, turns a fluid into a solid.

Boyle.

2. The state of union or inseparability.

What state of union can you find?

What props support, what chains the farm's kind?

Blackmore.

3. Connexion; dependence.

In their tender years, ideas that have no natural cohesion come to be united in their heads.

L'Estrange.

COHESIVE. adj. [from cohere, Lat.]

That has the power of sticking to another, and of resisting separation.

COHESIVENESS. n. f. [from cohesivus, Lat.]

The quality of being cohesive; the quality of resisting separation.

TO COHIBIT. v. a. [from cohibere, Lat.]

COLD. adj. [cold, Saxon; kalt, Germ.]

1. Not hot; not warm; gelid; wanting warmth; being without heat.

The diet in the state of manhood ought to be solid; and their chief drink water cold, because in such a state it has its own natural spirit.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

The aggregated soil

Death, with his mace puttick, cold, and dry,
As with a tildeut, smite Alton.

2. Causing fenise of cold.

Bids us seek

Some better shroud, some better warmth, to cheerish

Our limbs bequemb'd, ere this diurnal stir
Leave cold the night, how we his gather'd beams Refracted, may with maces fire foment. Alton.

3. Chill; shivering; having fenise of cold.

O noble English, that could entertain

With hail their force, the full power of France;
And let another half stand laughing by,
All out of work, and cold for action. Shakespeare.

4. Having cold qualities; not volatile; not acrid.

Cold plants have a quicker perception of the heat of the sun than the hot herbs; as a cold hand will sooner find a little warmth than an hot.

Bacon's Natural History.

5. Indifferent; frigid; wanting passion; wanting zeal; without concern; unactive; unconcerned; wanting ardour.

There sprung up one kind of men, with whose zeal and forwardness the rest being compared, were thought to be marvellous cold and dull.

Hooker's Preface.

Infinite shall be made cold in religion, by your example, that never were hurt by reading books. Asham.

Temp'rately proceed to what you would

Thus violently redress.—Sir, this cold way,
That seem like prudent helps, are very poisonous. Shakespeare.

New dated letters these,

Then cold intent, tenour, and substance thus;
Here doth he with his person, and his power,
The which he could not leave. Shakespeare.

We should not, when the blood was cold, have threatened our prisoners with the sword. Shakespeare.
To see a world in flames, and an host of angels in the clouds, one must be much of a stoick to be a cold and unconcerned spectator.

Burnet's Preface to the Theory of the Earth.

No drum or trumpet needs

To inspire the coward, or to warm the cold;
His voice, his sole appearance, makes them bold. Dryden.

O, thou hast touch'd me with thy sacred theme,

And my cold heart is kindled at thy flame. Rome.

A man must be of a very cold or degenerate temper, whose heart doth not burn within him in the midst of praise and adoration. Addison.

6. Unaffected; unable to move the passions.

What a deal of cold business doth a man suspend the better part of life in? In scattering compliments, tendering visits, following feasts and plays. Ben Jonson.

The rabble are pleased at the first entry of a disguise; but the just grows cold even with them too, when it comes on in a second view. Addison on Italy.

7. Reserved; coy; not affectionate; not cordial; not friendly.

Let his knights have colder looks Among you. Shakespeare's King Lear.
The commendments grew more reserved, and colder towards each other. Clarendon.

8. Chaste; not heated by vicious appetite.

Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty,
And yet seem cold, the time you may so hound-wink;

We've willing dames enough. Shakespeare.

As is a dead man's nose. Shakespeare.

COLD. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. The cause of the sensation of cold; the privation of heat; the frigorific power.

Four lined slippers for the cold. Shakespeare.

Heat and cold are nature's two hands, which rub the chiefly worketh; and heat we have in realness, in respect of the fire; but for cold, we must stay till it comes, or let it in deep caves, or high mountains; and, when all is done, we cannot attain it in any great degree. Bacon.

The sun

Had first his precept to move, to shine,
As might affect the earth with cold and heat
Scarce tolerable, and from the north to call Deceit winter, from the south to bring Solstitial summer's heat. Milton.

2. The sensation of cold; coldness; chillness.

When the saw her lord prepar'd to part,
A deadly cold ran shivering to her heart. Dryden.

3. A disease caused by cold; the obstruction of perspiration.

What disease hast thou?

A whoreson cold, sir; a cough. Shakespeare.

Let no ungentle cold destroy

All that we have of heaven's joy. Rosset.

Those rains, to covering the earth, might providentially contribute to the disruption of it, by stopping all the pores and all evaporation, which would make the vapours within struggle violently, as we get a fever by a cold. Burnet.

COLDLY. adv. [from cold.]

1. Without heat.

2. Without concern; indifferently; negligently; without warmth of temper or expression.

What England says, say briefly, gentle lord;

We coldly pause for thee. Shakespeare.

Swift seem'd to wonder what he meant,

Nor would believe my lord had sent;

So never offer'd once to stir,

But coldly said, Your servant, sir. Saunders.

COLDNESS. n. f. [from cold.]

1. Want of heat; power of causing the sensation of cold.

He relates the excessive coldness of the water they met with in summer in that icy region, where they were forced to winter. Bayle's Exp.

Such was the discord, which did first dispute
Form, order, beauty, through the universe;
While dryness moisture, coldness heat resist;
All that we have, and that we are subsists. Denham.

2. Unconcern; frigidity of temper; want of zeal; negligence; disregard.

Divisions of religion are not only the fault of spread, because in religion all men presume themselves interested; but they are also, for the most part, hotter prosecuted; so much as coldness, which, in other contentions, may be thought to proceed from moderation, is not in these to favourably construed. Hooker.

If, upon reading admired passages in authors, he finds a coldness and indifference in his thoughts, he ought to conclude, that he himself wants the faculty of discovering them. Addison.

It betrayed itself in a sort of indifference and carelessness in all her actions, and coldness to her best friends. Addison.

3. Coyness; want of kindness; want of passion.

Unhappy youth! how will thy coldness raise Temptations and storms in his afflicted bosom? Addison's Cato.

Let every tongue its various confusions shut,
Abolish with coldness, or with spite accuse. Pope.

4. Chastity; exemption from vehement desire.

The silver stream her virgin coldness keeps,
For ever murmurs, and for ever weeps. Pope.

COLE. n. f. [capl, Saxon.] A general name for all sorts of cabbage.

COLESEED. n. f. [from cold seed.] Cabbage seed.

Where land is sink, it is not good to sow wheat after a fallow; but coleseed or barley, and then wheat. Mortimer.

COLEWORT. n. f. [ca, lypst, Sax.] A species of cabbage.

The decoction of colewort is also commended to bathe them. Wise man of an Englishman.

She took the coleworts, which her husband got
From his own ground (a small well-water'd spot),
She strip'd the stalks of all their leaves; the best
She cull'd, and then with handy care she dress'd it. Dryden.

How turnips hide their swelling heads below,
And how the cloving coleworts upwards grow. Gay.

COLICK. n. f. [colicus, Latin.]

It strictly is a disorder of the colon; but loosely, any disorder of the stomach or bowels that is attended with pain. There are four sorts:

1. A bilious colick, which proceeds from an abundance of acrimony or cholera irritating the bowels, so as to occasion continual gripes, and generally with a looseness; and this is best managed with lenitives and emollients. 2. A flatulent colick, which is pain in the bowels from flatulency and wind, which distend them into unequal and unnatural capacities; and this is managed with carminatives and moderate opacities. 3. A hysterical colick, which arises from disorders of the womb, and is communicated by consent of parts to the bowels; and is to be treated with the ordinary hystericks. 4. A nervous colick, which is from convulsive spasms and contractions of the guts themselves; from some disorders of the spirits, or nervous fluid, in their component fibres; whereby their capacities are in many places strengthened, and sometimes so as to occasion obstinate obstructions; this is best remedied by brisk catharticks, joined with opiates and emollient diluents. There is also a species of this distemper, which is commonly called the stone colick, by consent of parts, from the irritation of the stone or gravel in the bladder or kidneys; and this is most commonly to be treated by nephriticks and oily diureticks, and is greatly assisted with the carminative turpentine clysters. Quincy.

Crickets of infants proceed from acidity, and the air in the stomach expanding itself, while the stomach ferments. Armet.

COLON. n. f. [κλόν, a member.]

1. A point [:] used to mark a pause greater than that of a comma, and less than that of a period. Its use is not very exactly fixed; nor is it very necessary, being confounded by most with the semicolon. It was used before punctuation was refined, to mark almost any sense less than a period. To apply it properly, we should place it, perhaps, only where the sense is continued without dependence of grammar or construction; as, I love him, I despise him: I have long ceased to trust, but shall never forsake to succour him

2. The greatest and widest of all the interstices, about eight or nine hands breadth long.

The colon begins where the album ends, in the cavity of the ovulum on the right side, from thence ascending by the kidney on the same side, it passes under the concave side of the liver, to which it is sometimes tied, as likewise to the renal bladder, which gives it yellow in that place; then it runs under the bottom of the stomach to the spleen in the left side, to which it is also knitted: from thence it turns down to the left kidney, and thence passing, in form of an S, it terminates at the upper part of the os sacrum in the rectum.

Quercet

Now, by your cruelty hard bound,
I strain my guts, my colon wound.

Shakespeare

The contents of the colon are of a brown, firm, acid fluid, in rabbits.

Thyer on the Horse

COLONEL. n. f. [of uncertain etymology. Skinner imagines it originally colonialis, the leader of a colony. Minsheu deduces it from colonna, a pillar: as, patriæ columnæ; exercitus columnæ. Each is plausible.] The chief commander of a regiment; a field officer of the highest rank, next to the general officers. It is now generally founded with only two distinct syllables, col'nel.

The chiefest help must be the care of the colonel, that hath the government of all his garrison.

Spenser on Ireland

Captain or colonel, or knight in arms,
Whole chance on these defenceless doors may seize,

If deed of honour did thee ever please,
Guard them, and him within protect from harm.

Milton

COLONELSHIP. n. f. [from col'nel.] The office or character of colonel.

While he continued a tubalton, he complained against the pride of colonels towards their officers; yet, in a few minutes after he had received his commission for a regiment, he confessed that col'nelship was coming fast upon him.

Steele

To COLONIZE. v. a. [from colony.] To plant with inhabitants; to settle with new planters; to plant with colonies.

There was never an land or way, that did make the rest of the habitable world, before this, in a man may truly term it, if he had put it to account as well that that is, as that which may be the cause, by the first occupation and colonizing of those countries; and yet it cannot be said, if one speak it generally, that now, the propagation of the christian faith that was the advantage of that discovery, entry, and plantation, brought forth silver, and temporal profit and glory, to that what was left in God's providence, was not second in man's appetite and intention.

Bacon's History

Dispute hath advantage by acquiescence of islands, while the colonies and territories daily.

Hume

COLONNADA. n. f. [from colonna, Ital. a column.]

1. A penstyle of a circular figure; or a series of columns disposed in a circle, and insulated within file.

Amongst curls and curls, I shall place coloration, though somewhat better; for beauty in flowers is their preeminence. Bacon's Natural History

COLORIFICK. adj. [colorificus, Latin.] That has the power of producing dyes, tints, colours, or hues.

In the composition of white, the several rays do not suffer any change in their colorific qualities by acting upon one another; but are only mixed, and by a mixture of their colours produce white. Newton's Optics

COLOSSUS. } n. f. [colossus, Lat.] A statue of enormous magnitude.

Not to mention the walls and palace of Babylon, the pyramids of Egypt, or a colossus of Rhodes. Temple

There huge colossi rose, with trophies crown'd, And tunick characters were grav'd around. Pope

COLOSSEAN. adj. [colossus, Latin.] In form of a colossus; of the height and bigness of such a statue; giantlike.

COLOUR. n. f. [color, Lat.]

1. The appearance of bodies to the eye only; hue; die.

It is a vulgar idea of the colours of solid bodies, when we perceive them to be a red, or blue, or green tincture of the surface; but a philosophical idea, when we consider the various causes to the different sensations, excited in us by the refracted rays of light, reflected on our eyes in a different manner, according to the different size, or shape, or situation of the particles of which surfaces are composed. Newton

Her hair shall be of what colour it pleases God. Tristram

For though our eyes can nought but colours see, Yet colours give them not their power of sight. Paradise

The lights of colours are more refrangible one than another in this order; red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, deep violet. Newton

2. The freshness, or appearance of blood, in the face.

House and heart are open for a friend: the passage is easy, and not only admits, but even invites, the comer. South.

COMET. n. f. [cometa, Lat. a hairy star.]

A heavenly body in the planetary region, appearing suddenly, and again disappearing; and, during the time of its appearance, moving through its proper orbit like a planet. The orbits of comets are ellipses, having one of their foci in the centre of the sun; and being very long and eccentric, they become invisible when in that part most remote from the sun. Comets, particularly called blazing stars, are distinguished from other stars by a long train or tail of light, always opposite to the sun: thence arises a popular division of comets into three kinds, bearded, tailed, and hairy comets; though the division rather relates to the different circumstances of the same comet, than to the phenomena of the several.

Thus, when the comet is eastward of the sun, and moves from it, the comet is said to be bearded, barbatus, because the light marches before it.

When the light is westward of the sun, the comet is said to be tailed, because the train follows it.

When the comet and the sun are diametrically opposite, the earth being between them, the train is hid behind the body of the comet, excepting a little that appears around it, in form of a border of hair, hence called crinitus.

According to Sir Isaac Newton, the tail of a comet is a very thin vapour, emitted by the head or nucleus of the comet, ignited by the neighbourhood to the sun; and this vapour is furnished by the atmosphere of the comet. The vapours of comets being thus diluted, rarefied, and diffused, may probably, by means of their own gravity, be attracted down to the planets, and become intermingled with their atmospheres. For the conservation of the water and moisture of the planets, comets seem absolutely requisite; from whose condensed vapours and exhalations all the moisture which is spent in vegetations and putrefactions, and turned into dry earth, may be resupplied and recruited; for all vegetables increase wholly from fluids, and turn, by putrefaction, into earth. Hence the quantity of the earth must continually increase, and the moisture of the globe decrease, and at last be quite evaporated, if it have not a continual supply. As I suspect, adds Sir Isaac, that the spirit which makes the finest, sublimest, and best part of our air, and which is absolutely requisite for a clear and being of all things, comes principally from the comets.

The same great author has computed that the sun's heat, in the comet of 1680, was, to his heat with us at midsummer, as twenty-eight thousand to one; and that the heat of the body of the comet was near two thousand times as great as that of red-hot iron. He also calculates, that a globe of red-hot iron, of the dimensions of our earth, would scarce be cool in fifty thousand years. If then the comet be supposed to cool a hundred times as fast as red-hot iron, yet, since its heat was two thousand times greater, supposing it of the bigness of the earth, it would not be cool in a million of years.

And wherefore gaze this goodly company,
As if they saw some wondrous monument,
Some comet, or unusual prodigy? Shakespeare.
Such his flash-glances as the fatal light
Of blazing comets. Cromwell.
I considered a comet, or, in the language of the vulgar, a blazing star, as a sky-rocket discharged by a hand that is almighty. Addison.
Fierce meteors shoot their arbitrary light,
And comets march with lawless horrors bright.

Co'METARY. } adj. [from comet] Relat-Co'METICK. } ing to a comet.

Refractions of light are in the planetary and cometary regions, as on our globe. Claude.

COMFIT. n. f. [bellaria arida, Latin; konfit, Dutch. It should seem that both are formed by hasty pronunciation from confect.] A dry sweetmeat; any kind of fruit or root preserved with sugar, and dried.

1. To represent as worthy of notice, regard, or kindness; to recommend.

2 Y 2

After Barbarossa was arrived, it was known how effectually the chief bails had commended him to Solymán.

Among the objects of knowledge, two especially commend themselves to our contemplation; the knowledge of God, and the knowledge of ourselves.

Vain-glory is a principle I commend to no man.

1. To deliver up with confidence.
To thee I do commend my watchful soul;
Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes:
Sleeping and waking, O defend me still! Shakspeare
Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit. Luke.

3. To praise; to mention with approbation.

Who is Sylvia? What is she,
That all our swains commend her?
Holy, fair, and wise is she. Shakspeare
Old men do most exceed in this point of folly, Commending the days of their youth; they scarce remember,
at least well understand not. Bacon
He lov'd my worthless thymel; and, like a friend,
Would find out something to commend. Country Hillmans commend Alexander for weeping when he read the actions of Achilles. Dryden
Each finding, like a friend,
Something to blame, and something to commend. Pope.

4. To mention by way of keeping in memory; to recommend to remembrance.

Signor Antonio
Commends him to you —
— Ere I open his letter,
I pray you tell me how my good friend doth.

These draw the chariot which Latinus sends,
And the rich present to the prince commends. Dry.

- COMME'ND. n. f. [from the verb.] Commendation. Not in use.

Tell her I send to her my kind commends;
Take special care my greetings be deliver'd. Shakspeare.

- COMME'NDABLE. adj. [from commend.]

Laudable; worthy of praise. Anciently accented on the first syllable.

And power, unto itself most commendable,
Hath not a tomb so evident, as a chair
To exult what it hath done. Shakspeare.

Order and decent ceremonies in the church,
are not only comely, but commendable. Bacon.

Many heroes, and most worthy persons, being sufficiently commendable from true and unequalled merit, have received advancement from falsehood. Brown's Vul. Errors.

Britannia is not drawn, like other countries, in a soft peaceful posture; but is adorned with emblems that mark out the military genius of her inhabitants. This is, I think, the only commendable quality that the old poets have touched upon in the description of our country. Addison.

- COMME'NDABLY. adv. [from commendable.]

Laudably; in a manner worthy of commendation.

Of preachers the three holdeth a number, all commendably labouring in their vocation. Carew.

His fame would not get so sweet and noble an air to fly in as in your breath, to could not you find a fitter subject of commendation. Sidney.

3. Ground of praise.

Good-nature is the most godlike commendation of a man. Dryden's Farnal, Dedication.

4. Message of love.

Mrs. Page has her hearty commendations to you too. Shakspeare.

Hark you, you Margaret,
No princely commendations to my king! —
— Such commendations as become a maid,
A virgin, and his servant, say to him. Shakspeare.

- COMME'NDATORY. adj. [from commend.]

Favourably representative; containing praise.

It doth much add to a man's reputation, and is like perpetual letters commendatory, to have good forms; to attain them, it almost sufficeth not to despise them. Bacon's Essays.

We bellow the flourish of poetry on those commendatory conceits which popularly set forth the eminency of this creature. Frost.

If I can think that neither he nor you despise me, it is a greater honour to me, by far, than if all the house of lords writ commendatory verses upon me. Pope.

- COMME'NDER. n. f. [from commend.]

Praiser.

Such a concurrence of two extremes, by most of the same commendators and disprisers. Wotton.

tiles, upon promiscuous commensality. Brown.

- COMMENSURABILITY. n. f. [from commensurable.]

Capacity of being compared with another, as to the measure; or of being measured by another. Thus an inch and a yard are commensurable, a yard containing a certain number of inches; the diameter and circumference of a circle are incommensurable, not being reducible to any common measure.

Proportion.

Some place the essence thereof in the proportion of parts, conceiving it to consist in a comely commensurability of the whole unto the parts, and the parts between themselves. Brown.

- COMME'NSURABLE. adj. [con and mensura, Latin.] Reducible to some common measure: as a yard and a foot are measured by an inch.

- COMME'NSURABLENESS. n. f. [from *commen-
surable*.]

Commensurability; proportion.

There is no commensurableness between this object and a created understanding, yet there is a congruity and conaturality. Hale.

- To COMME'NSURATE. v. a. [con and mensura, Lat.] To reduce to some common measure.

That division is not natural, but artificial, and by agreement, as the apoll terms to commensurate the longitude of places. Brown.

the nature of things? Glanville.

Those who are persuaded that they shall continue for ever, cannot chide but aspire after a happiness commensurate to their duration. Tillot.

Nothing commensurate to the desires of human nature, on which it could fix as its ultimate end, without being carried on with any further desire.

Matter and gravity are always commensurate.

- COMME'NSURATELY. adv. [from commen-surate.]

With the capacity of measuring, or being measured by some other thing.

We are constrained to make the day serve to measure the year as well as we can, though not commensurately to each year; but by collecting the fraction of days in several years, till they amount to an even day. Haller on Time.

- COMMENSURA'TION. n. f. [from commen-surate.]

Proportion; reduction of some things to some common measure.

A body over great, or over small, will not be shown so far as a body of a middle size, in that, it seemeth, there must be a commensuration or proportion between the body moved and the force, to make it move well. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

All fitness lies in a particular commensuration, or proportion, of one thing to another. Stark.

- To COMMENT. v. n. [commentor, Lat.]

1. To annotate; to write notes upon an author; to expound; to explain: with upon before the thing explained.

Such are thy lectures, which my life makes good,
And comments on thee; for in every thing
Thy words do bind me out, and parallels bring,
And in another make me understand. Herbert.

Criticks having first taken a liking to one of these poets, proceed to comment on him, and illustrate him. Dryden's Farnal, Dedication.

They have contented themselves only to comment upon these texts, and make the best copies they could after those originals. Temple.

Indeed I hate that any man should be idle,
while I must translate and comment. Pope.

2. To make remarks; to make observations.

Enter his chamber, view his life is corrupt,
And comment then upon his sudden death. Shakspeare.

- COMMENT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Annotations on an author; notes; explanation; exposition; remarks.

Adam came into the world a philosopher, which appeared by his writing the nature of things upon their names: he could view essences in themselves, and read forms without the comment of their respective properties. South.

All the volumes of philosophy,
With all their comments, never could invent
So politic an instrument. Pope.

Proper gestures, and vehement exertions of the voice, are a kind of comment to what is uttered.

Still, with itself compar'd, his text peculiar;
And let your comment be the Mantuan muse. Pope.

2. Remark; observation.

Is such a case as this, it is not meet
That every nice offence should bear its comment. Shakspeare.

Forgive the comment that my passion made Upon thy feature; for my rage was blind. Shakspeare's King John.

Even to the point of envy, if 'twere made Comparative for your virtues, to be filled
The under hangman of his realm. Shakespeare.

There reflecteth the comparative, that is, granted that it is either lawful or blinding; yet whether other things he has to be preferred before the extirpation of heresies. Bacon.

The blossom is a positive good; although the removal of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good. Bacon.

This bubble, by reason of its comparative levity to the fluid that incloses it, would necessarily ascend to the top. Bentley.

2. Having the power of comparing different things.

Beauty is not known by an eye or nose; it consists in a symmetry, and it is the comparative faculty which notes it. Cicero.

3. [In grammar.] The comparative degree expresses more of any quantity in one thing than in another; as, the right hand is the stronger.

COMPARATIVELY. adv. [from comparative.]

In a state of comparison; according to estimate made by comparison; not positively.

The good or evil, which is removed, may be estimated good or evil comparatively, and not positively or simply. Bacon.

In this world, whatever is called good, is comparatively with other things of its kind, or with the evil mingled in its composition; so he is a good man that is better than men commonly are, or in whom the good qualities are more than the bad. Temple.

The vegetables being comparatively lighter than the ordinary terrestrial matter of the globe, subsidised last. Woodward.

But how few, comparatively, are the instances of this wise application! Rogers.

To COMPARE. v. a. [comparo, Lat.]

1. To make one thing the measure of another; to estimate the relative goodness or badness, or other qualities, of any one thing, by observing how it differs from something else.

I will hear Brutus speak.—
I will hear Cassius, and compare their reasons.
Shakespeare.

They measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves, are not wise. 2 Cor.

No man can think it grievous, who considers the pleasure and sweetness of love, and the glorious victory of overcoming evil with good; and then compares these with the restless torment, and perpetual tumults, of a malicious and revengeful spirit. Tillotson.

He that hath got the idea of numbers, and hath taken the pains to compare one, two, and three, to six, cannot chuse but know they are equal. Locke.

Thus much of the wrong judgment men make of present and future pleasure, and pain, when they are compared together, and so the a few considered as future. Locke.

2. It may be observed, that when the comparison intends only similitude or illustration by likeness, we use to before the thing brought for illustration; as, he compared anger to a fire.

Soloni compared the people who to the sea, and orators and counsellors to the winds; for that the sea would be calm and quiet, if the winds did not trouble it. Bacon's Aphorisms.

3. When two persons or things are compared, to discover their relative proportion of any quality, with is used before the thing used as a measure.

Most glorious. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Simile; similitude; illustration by comparison.

True twins in love shall, in the world to come,
Approve their truths by Troilus; when their rhimes,

Full of protest, and oath, and big compare,
Went forth. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

COMPARISON. n. s. [comparaison, Fr.]

1. The act of comparing.

Natalis Comes, comparing his parts with those of a man, reckons his claws among them, which are much more like those of a lion: so easy it is to drive on the comparison too far to make it good. Greco's Musaeum.

Our author saves me the comparisons with tragedy; for he says that herein he is to imitate the tragick poet. Dryden.

2. The state of being compared.

If we will rightly estimate what we call good and evil, we shall find it lies much in compari- son. Locke.

Objects near our view are apt to be thought greater than those of a larger size that are more remote; and so it is with pleasure and pain:
the present is apt to carry it, and thus at a distance have the disadvantage of the comparison.
Locke.

3. A comparative estimate; proportion.

If men would live as religion requires, the world would be a most lovely and desirable place, in comparison of what now it is. Tillotson.

One can scarce imagine how so plentiful a soil should become so miserably unpeopled, in comparison of what it once was. Addison.

4. A simile in writing or speaking; an illustration by similitude.

As fair and as good a kind of hand in hand comparison, had been something too fair and too good for a lady. Shakespeare.

and compass thee around, and keep thee in on every side. Luke.

4. To grasp; to enclose in the arms; to seize.

5. To obtain; to procure; to attain; to have in the power.

That which by wisdom he saw to be requisite for that people, was by as great wisdom compass'd. Heber's Preface.

His master being one of great regard,
In court to compass any suit not hard. Hab. Tale.
If I can check my erring love, I will;
If not, to compass her I'll use my skill. Shaksp.

How can you hope to compass your designs,
And not disfigure them? Dryden.

He had a mind to make himself master of Weymouth, if he could compass it without engaging his army before it. Clarendon.

The church of Rome createth titular pontiffs of Constantinople and Alexandria, to both is the pope to lose the remembrance of any title that he hath once compass'd. Brecon.

Invention is the first part, and absolutely necessary to them both; yet no rule ever was, or ever can be given, how to compass it. Dryden.

The knowledge of what is good and what is evil, what ought and what ought not to be done, is a thing too large to be compass'd, and too hard to be mastered, without brains and study, pains and contemplation. Locke.

In every work regard the writer's end,
Since none can compass more than they intend.

6. [In law.] To take measures preparatory to any thing: as, to compass the death of the king.

COM'PASS. n. f. [from the verb.]

(I speak within compass) no such commission had been executed in either of these provinces.

Nothing is likelier to keep a man within compass, than the having constantly before his eyes the state of his affairs, in a regular course of account. Locke.

7. The power of the voice to express the notes of music.

You would sound me from my lowest note to the top of my compass. Shakspere.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This universal frame began:

From harmony to harmony

Through all the compass of the notes it ran,

The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.

8. [This is rarely used in the singular.] The instrument with which circles are drawn.

If they be two, they are two to

As and twin compass are two:

Thy soul, the first foot, makes no show

To move; but doth, if the other do. Dan.

In his hand

He took the golden compass, prepar'd

In God's eternal store, to circumscribe

This universe, and all created things. Milton.

To fix one part of their compass, wherever they think fit, a second the other to such terrible lengths, without detailing any circumference at all, is to leave us and ourselves in a very uncertain state. South.

9. The instrument composed of a needle and card, whereby mariners steer.

The breath of religion fills the law; profit is the compass by which faithful men steer their course. King Charles.

No useful compass or meridian known

Coasting they kept the land within their ken,

And knew no north but when the pole-star shone. Dryden.

With equal force the tempest blows by turns

From every corner of the sea-man's compass. Rowe.

He that first discovered the use of the compass, did more for the supplying and increase of useful commodities, than those who built workhouses.

10. In old language there was a phrase, to come in compass, to be brought round.

COMPASS-SAW. n. f.

The compass-saw should not have its teeth set,
as other saws have; but the edge of it should be made so broad, and the back so thin, that it may easily follow the broad edge. Its office is to cut a round; and therefore the edge must be made broad, and the back thin, that the back may have a wide keel to turn in. Mason.

- COMPASSION. n. f. [compassion, Fr.
from con and pater, Latin.] Pity;
commiseration; sorrow for the sufferings of others; painful sympathy.

Ye had compassion of me in my bonds.

Their angry hands,

My brothers hold, and vengeance they exact;

This pleads compassion, and repents the fact. Dryden's Fables.

The good-natured man is apt to be moved with compassion for those misfortunes or infirmities, which another would turn into ridicule.

To COMPA'SSION. v. a. [from the noun.]

To pity; to compassionate; to commiserate. A word scarcely used.

O heavens! can you hear a good man groan,

And not relent, or not compassion him? Shaksp.

Of love's assurance, and a train of eyes,
That, made in lust, conclude in perjury. Dryden.
We'll tell when 'tis enough,
Or if it wants the nice concluding bout. King.

CONCLUS'ION. n. f. [from concludere.] Consequence; regular proof; logical deduction of reason.

Judgment concerning things to be known, or the neglect and conclusivity of them, ends in decision. Hale.

CONCL'USIVE. adj. [from conclude.] Decisive ending in just and undeniable consequences.

Though these kind of arguments may seem more obscure, yet, upon a due consideration of them, they are highly consequential and conclusive to my purpose. Hale.

CONCL'USIVELY. adv. [from conclude.] With uncontrovertible evidence.

Examine whether the opinion you meet with, repugnant to what you were formerly embued with, be conclusively demonstrated or not. Digby.

CONCL'USIBLE. adj. [from conclude.] Determinable; certain by regular proof.

'Tis as certainly conclusible from God's presence, that they will voluntarily do this, as that they will do it at all. Hammond.

CONCL'USION. n. f. [from conclude.]

1. Determination; final decision.

Ways of peaceable conclusion there are but three too certain; the one a sentence of judicial decision, given by authority thereto appointed within ourselves; the other, the like kind of sentence given by a more universal authority. Hooker.

2. The collection from propositions premises; the consequence.

The conclusion of experience, from the time past to the time present, will not be found and pursued. Bacon's War with Spain.

And marrying divers principles and grounds, Out of their match true conclusions bring. Darwin.

Then doth the wit
Build fond conclusions on those idle grounds:
Then doth it fly the good, and ill pursue. Darwin.

I only deal by rules of art,
Such as are lawful, and judge by Conclusions of astrology. Hudibras.

It is of the nature of principles, to yield a conclusion different from themselves. Tillotson.

He granted him both the major and the minor, but denied him the conclusion. Addison.

3. The close; the last result of argumentative deduction.

Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter:
Fear God, and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man. Ecclesi.

I have been reasoning, and in conclusion have thought it best to return to what fortune hath made my home. Swift.

4. The event of experiments; experiment.

Her physician tells me,
She has pursued conclusions infinite
Of easy ways to die. Shakspere.

We practise likewise all conclusions of grafting and inoculating, as well of wild trees as fruit trees. Bacon's New Atlantis.

5. The end; the last part.

I can speak no longer; yet I will strain myself to breathe out this one invocation, which shall be my conclusion. Howell.

6. In Shakspere it seems to signify silence; confinement of the thoughts.

Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes
And still conclusion, shall acquire no honour, Demurring upon me. Antony and Cleopatra.

CONCL'USIVE. adj. [from conclude.]

1. Decisive; giving the last determination to the opinion.

The agreeing votes of both houses were not by any law or reason conclusive to my judgment. King Charles.

The last dictate of the understanding is not always absolute in itself, nor conclusive to the will, yet it produces no interdict nor external necessity. Brouncker's Answer to Hobbes.

They have secret reasons for what they seem to do, which, whatever they are, they must be equally conclusive for us as they were for them. Rogers.

2. Regularly consequential.

Those that are not men of art, not knowing the true forms of syllogism, cannot know whether they are made in right and conclusive modes and figures. Locke.

CONCL'USIVELY. adv. [from conclusive.] Decisively; with final determination.

This I speak only to desire Eupolis not to speak peremptorily, or conclusively, touching the point of possibility, till they have heard me deduce the means of the execution. Bacon.

CONCL'USIVENESS. n. f. [from conclusive.] Power of determining the opinion; regular consequence.

Consideration of things to be known, of their several weights, conclusiveness, or evidence. Hale.

The saline parts of those, upon their solution by the rain, may work upon those other substances, formerly congealed with them. Boyle.

They do but congeal themselves, without congealating with them any water. Boyle.

CONCOAGULA'TION. n. f. [from concoagulare.] A congealation by which different bodies are joined in one mass.

TO CONCOCT. v. a. [from concoquo, Lat.]

1. To digest by the stomach, so as to turn food to nutriment.

The working of purging medicines cometh two or three hours after the medicines taken; for that the stomach first maketh a proof, whether it can convert them. Bacon.

Astutely he was a man of a subtle stomach, unable to convert any great fortune, prosperous, or adverse. Hayward.

The vital functions are performed by general and constant laws; the food is converted, the heart beats, the blood circulates, the lungs play. Chyren's Philos. Principles.

The notions and sentiments of other judgment, as well as of our own memory, make our property: it does, as it were, convert our intellectual food, and turns it into a part of ourselves. Watts on the Mind.

2. To purify or sublime by heat; to heighten to perfection.

The small close-lurking minister of fate,
Whose high converted veom through the vaults
A rapid lightning darts. Thomson's Summer.

3. To ripen.

The root which continueth ever in the ear, is still converted by the earth; and fruits and grains are half a year in converting, whereas leaves are out and perfect in a month. Bacon.

CONCOCT'ION. n. f. [from concoctio.] Digestion in the stomach; maturation by heat; the acceleration of any thing to ward purity and perfection.

This hard colling is between concoction and simple maturation. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The constantest notion of concoctio is, that it should signify the degree of alteration of one body into another, from crudity to perfect concoction, which is the utility of that action or process. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

He, though he knew not which soul spoke,
Because both meant, both spake the same,
Might thence a new concoction take,
And part far purer than he came. Dante.

CONCOLOUR. adj. [from concolor, Latin.] Of one colour; without variety.

In case of animals, and such as are confined unto the same colour, we measure not their beauty merely; for if a crow or black bird grow white, we account it more pretty. Brown.

CONCOMITANCE. n. f. [from concomitant.] CONCOMITANCY. } for, Lat.] Substistence together with another thing.

The two stars action is sufficient not alone, but in concomitancy with the other; so the motions are useful for refraction and smelling, but the principal use is smelling. Bour.

To argue from a concomitancy to a causality, is not infallibly conclusive. Glavin.

CONCOMITANT. adj. [from concomitant, Lat.] Conjoined with; concurrent with; coming and going with, as collateral, not causative or consequential.

The spirit that furthesteth the creation or dilatation of bodies, and is ever concomitant with porosity and dryness. Bacon.

It has pleased our wife Creator to annex to several objects, as also to several of our thoughts, a concomitant pleasure; and that in severally different degrees. Locke.

CONCOMITANT. n. f. Companion; person or thing collaterally connected.

These effects are, from the local motion of the air, a concomitant of the sound, and not from the sound. Bacon.

He made him the chief concomitant of his heart apparent and only foe, in a journey of much adventure. Watts.

In consumptions, the preternatural concomitants, an universal heat of the body, a tormented diarrhoea, and hot distillations, have all a corrosive quality. Harvey on Consumption.

The other concomitant of ingratitude is hard-heartedness, or want of compassion. Swift.

Harrow harks around,
Wild faring, and his Gad concomitant Philips.

Delapan, of shaggy hounds.
Reproach is a concomitant to greatness, as flattery and invectives were an essential part of a Roman triumph. Addison.

And for tobacco, who could bear it? Prior.
Fulthy concomitant of claret!
Where antecedents, concomitants and consequences, causes and effects, signs and things signified, subjects and adjuncts, are necessarily connected with each other, we may infer. Watts.

CONCOMITANTLY. adv. [from concomitant.] In company with others. Dict.

To CONCOMITATE. v. a. [concomitatus, Lat.] To be collaterally connected with any thing; to come and go with another; to attend; to accompany.

CONCORD. n. f. [concordia, Latin.]

1. Agreement between persons or things; untableness of one to another; peace; union; mutual kindness.

Hid I power, I should Pair the sweet milk of concord into hell,
Upstart the universal peace. Shakespeare.
What concord hath Christ with Belial? 2 Cor.
One shall life

Of proud ambitious heart, who not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion undescried
Over his brethren, and quite dispossess
Heaven and law of nature from the earth. Mil.

Unsafe within the wind
Of such commotion; such as, to let forth
Great things by small, if nature's concord broke,
Among the concussions war were tugging. Mil.
Kind concord, heavenly born! whole blitful reign
Holds this vast globe in one surrounding chain;
Soul of the world! Locke.

2. A compact.
It appeareth by the concord made between Henry and Roderick the Irish king. Darwin.

3. Harmony; consent of sounds.
The man who hath not music in himself,
Nor is not moved with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons. Shakespeare.

4. Principal grammatical relation of one word to another, distinct from regimen.
Have those who have writ about the colonies,
Syntaxes, lost their labour? Locke.

CONCORDANCE. n. f. [concordantia, Lat.]

1. Agreement.
2. A book which shows in how many texts of scripture any word occurs.

I shall take it for an opportunity to tell you, how you are to rule the city out of a concordance.
South's Sermons, Dedication.

Some of you turn over a concordance, and there, having the principal word, introduce as much of the verb as will serve your turn. Swift.
An old concordance bound long since. Swift.

3. A concord in grammar; one of the three chief relations in speech. It is not now in use in this sense.

After the three concordances learned, let the master read unto him the epistles of Cicero. Arbuthnot.

CONCORDANT. adj. [concordans, Lat.] Agreeable; agreeing; correspondent; harmonious.

Were every one employed in points concordant to their natures, professions, and arts, commonweals would rise up of themselves. Brown.

CONCORDATE. n. f. [concordat, Fr. concordatum, Latin.] A compact; a convention.

How comes he to number the want of synods in the Gallican church among the grievances of that concordate, and as a mark of their slavery, since he reckons all convocations of the clergy
in England to be useless and dangerous? Swift.

CONCORPORAL. adj. [from concorporo,
VOL. I.

Lat. to incorporate.] Of the same body. Dict.

To CONCORPORATE. v. a. [from con and corpus.] To unite in one mass or substance.

When we incorporate the sign with the signification, we conjoin the word with the spirit. Fowler.

To CONCORPORATE. v. n. [con and corpus.] To unite into one body.

Thus we challenge the God of wine
With water that is feminine,
Until the cooler nymph abate
His wrath, and to incorporate. Cleveland.

CONCORPORATION. n. f. [from concorporare.] Union in one mass; intimate mixture. Dict.

CONCOURSE. n. f. [concurfus, Latin.]

1. The confluence of many persons or things to one place.

Do all the night's guards,
The city's watch, with the people's fears,
The concourse of all good men, think thee not long? Ben Jonson.

The coalition of the good frame of the universe was not the product of chance, or fortuitous concurrence of particles of matter. Hale.

Vain is his force, and vain is his skill,
With such a concourse comes the flood of ill. Dryden's Fables.

2. The persons assembled.

The prince with water leaves, from every part,
The noise and busy concourse of the court. Dryden.

3. The point of junction or intersection of two bodies.

So soon as the upper glass is laid upon the lower,
so as to touch it at one end, and to touch the drop at the other end, making with the lower glass an angle of about ten or fifteen minutes; the drop will begin to move towards the concourse of the glasses, and will continue to move with an accelerated motion, till it arrives at that concourse of the glasses. Newton.

CONCRIMATION. n. f. [from concremo, Lat. to burn together.] The act of burning many things together. Dict.

CONCREMENT. n. f. [from concrefo, Lat.] The mass formed by concretion; a collection of matter growing together.

There is the cohesion of the matter into a more loose consistency, like clay, and thereby it is prepared to the cement of a pebble or flint. Hall's Origin of Man.

CONCRESCENCE. n. f. [from concrefo, Lat.] The act or quality of growing by the union of separate particles.

Seeing it is neither a substance perfect, nor inchoate, how any other substance should thence take concrefo, hath not been taught. Ralph.

To CONCRETE. v. n. [concrefo, Lat.] To coalesce into one mass; to grow by the union and cohesion of parts.

The minutest or mercurial matter, thus converted with the crystalline, is equally diffused throughout the body of it. Wilson.

When any saline liquor is evaporated to a cuticle, and let cool, the salt concretes in regular figures; which argues that the particles of the salt, before they concrete, floated in the liquor at equal distances, in rank and file. Newton.

The blood of some who died of the plague, could not be made to concrete, by reason of the putrefaction begun. Arbuthnot.

To CONCRETE. v. a. To form by concretion; to form by the coalition of scattered particles.

That there are in our inferior world divers bodies, that are converted out of others, is beyond all dispute: we see it in the meteors. Hale.

Co'NCRETE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Formed by concretion; formed by coalition of separate particles into one mass.

The first concrete state, or consistent surface, of the chaos, must be of the same figure as the last liquid state. Burnet.

2. [In logic.] Not abstract: applied to a subject.

A kind of mutual commutation there is, whereby those concrete names, God and man, when we speak of Christ, do take interchangeably one another's room; so that, for truth or speech, it falleth not whether we say that the son of God hath created the world, and the son of man by his death hath saved it, or else that the son of man did create, and the son of God died to save the world. Hobbes.

Concrete terms, while they express the quality, do also either express, or imply, or refer to some subject to which it belongs: a white, round, long, broad, wife, mortal, living, dead, but these are not always noun adjectives in a grammatical sense; for a knave, a fool, a philosopher, and many other concrete, are substantives, as well as knowers, folly, and philosophy, which are the abstract terms that belong to them. Watts's Logic.

Co'NCRETE. n. f. A mass formed by concretion; or, union of various parts adhering to each other.

It could itself be admitted, as it must be, for a porous concrete, the proportion of void to body, in the texture of common air, will be so much the greater. Best's Sermons.

CONCRETELY. adv. [from concrete.] In a manner including the subject with the predicate; not abstractedly.

Sin, considered not abstractedly for the mere act of obliquity, but concretely, with such a special dependence of it upon the will as serves to render the agent guilty. Norris.

CONCRETENESS. n. f. [from concrete.] Coagulation; collection of fluids into a solid mass. Dict.

CONCRETION. n. f. [from concrete.]

1. The act of concreting; coalition.

2. The mass formed by a coalition of separate particles.

Some plants, upon the top of the sea, are supposed to grow of some concretion of slime from the water, where the sea stirreth little. Bacon.

Heat, in general, doth not relieve and attenuate the juices of a human body; for too great heat will produce concretions. Arbuthnot.

Co'NCRETIVE. adj. [from concrete.] Having the power to produce concretions; coagulative.

When wood and other bodies petrify, we do not ascribe their induration to cold, but unto fulminous spirit, or concretive juices. Brown.

CONCRETURE. n. f. [from concrete.] A mass formed by coagulation.

CONCUBINAGE. n. f. [concubinage, Fr. concubinatus, Lat.] The act of living with a woman not married.

Adultery was punished with death by the ancient heathens: concubinage was permitted. Brown.

CONCUBINE. n. f. [concubina, Lat.] A woman kept in fornication; a whore; a strumpet.

I know I am too mean to be your queen,
And yet too good to be your concubine. Shaksp.

When his great friend was suitor to him to pardon an offender, he denied him: afterwards, when a concubine of his made the same suit, he granted it to her; and said, Such suits were to be granted to whores. Bacon.

CON

He caused him to paint one of his concubines, Canispa, who had the greatest share in his affection. Dryden.

The wife, though a bright goddess, thus gives place

To mortal weakness of flesh embrace. Granville.

CONCULCATION. n. f. [conculcatio, Lat.] Trampling with the feet. Dict.

CONCUPISCENCE. n. f. [concupiscentia, Latin.] Irregular desire; libidinous wish; lust; lechery.

We know even secret concupiscentia to be strong, and are made fearful to offend, though it be but in a wandering imagination. Hooker.

In our faces the evident signs
Of secret concupiscentia, whence evil there,
In the flame, the lust of eyes. Milton.

Not as the fawn, at the influence of a smile,
Or as the dove, at the approach of a feather,
Nor as the fish, at the sight of a bait, does he Concupiscentia, and is so easily won. It would be a great advantage not to know, that a people has been over-run with recently invented vice. Reverend Sermon.

CONCUPISCENT. adj. [concupiscent, Lat.] Libidinous; lecherous.

He would not, but by gift of my chaste body
To his concupiscent intemperate lust, Reclaim my brother! Shakespeare.

CONCUPISCIBLE. adj. [concupiscibilis, Lat.] Impressing desire; eager; desirous; inclining to the pursuit or attainment of any thing.

The school reduce all the passions to these two heads, the concupiscentia and irascible appetite. South's Sermons.

To CONCUR. v. n. [concurro, Lat.]

1. To meet in one point.

Though reason favour them, yet sense can hardly allow them; and, to satisfy, both these must concur. Temple.

2. To agree; to join in one action, or opinion.

Acts which shall be done by the greater part of my executors, shall be as valid and effectual as if all my executors had concurred in the same. Swift's Last Will.

3. It has visu before the person with whom one agrees.

It is not evil simply to concur with the heathens, either in opinion or action; and that conformity with them is only then a disgrace, when we follow them in that they do amiss, or particularly in that they do without reason. Hooker.

4. It has in before the effect to which one contributes.

Their affections were known to concur to the most desperate counsels. Clarendon.

Extremes in nature equal good produce,
Extremes in man concur to general use. Pope.

5. To be united with; to be conjoined.

To have an orthodox belief, and a true profession, concurring with a bad life, is only to deny Christ with a greater solemnity. South.

Testimony is the argument; and, if false, the fatal flaw of reason concur with it, this argument hath a force strength it can have. Tillotson.

6. To contribute to one common event with joint power.

With a vast chorus concur, the idle are Foment bravely this infection. Cather.

CONCURRENCE. n. f. [from concur.]

1. Union; association; conjunction.

We have no other store but our own ideas, with the concurrence of other probable reasons, to persuade us. Locke.

CON

2. Agreement; act of joining in any design, or measures.

Their concurrence in persuasion, about some material points belonging to the same polity, is not strange. Hooker, Preface.

The concurrence of the peers in that fury, can be imputed to the irreverence the judges were in. Clarendon.

Tarquin the proud was expelled by an universal concurrence of nobles and people. Shakespeare.

3. Combination of many agents or circumstances.

Struck with these great concurrences of things. Clarendon.

4. Assistance; help.

From these sublime images we collect the grounds of the work, and the necessity of the concurrence of the powers. Logan.

5. Joint right; equal claim.

A bishop might have a claim, if there was a concurrence of jurisdiction between him and the archbishop. Shakespeare.

CONCURRENT. adj. [from concur.]

1. Acting in conjunction; agreeing in the same act; contributing to the same event; concomitant in agency.

I join with these laws the personal presence of the king's son, as a concurrent cause of this reformation. Parson's Island.

For, without the concurrent consent of all the three parts of the legislature, no such law is or can be made. Hale.

This sole vital faculty is not sufficient to exterminate noxious humours to the periphery, unless the animal faculty be concurrent with it, to supply the fibres with animal spirits. Hartley.

All combined,
Your beauty, and my impotence of mind,
And his concurrent flame, that heat my fire;
For still our kindred souls had one desire. Dryden.

2. Conjoined; associate; concomitant.

There is no difference between the concurrent echo and the iterant, but the quickness or slowness of the return. Bacon.

CONCURRENT. n. f. [from concur.] That which concurs; a contributory cause.

To all affairs of importance there are three necessary concurrents, without which they can never be dispatched; time, industry, and facilities. Dillon's Party.

CONCUSSION. n. f. [concussio, Lat.]

1. The act of shaking; agitation; tremor.

It is believed that great ringing of bells, in populous cities, has a dangerous pernicious effect, which may be proved by the shaking of the air. Bacon.

The strong shaking of the heavens told Roll'd back the clouds to the island's side. Pope.

2. The state of being shaken.

There want not instances of such an universal concussion of the waves, as they must needs imply an agitation of the whole body. Hawward.

CONCUSSIVE. adj. [concussus, Lat.] Having the power or quality of shaking.

To CONDEMN. v. a. [condemno, Lat.]

1. To find guilty; to doom to punishment; contrary to absolve.

My conscience with a thousand several tongues,
And every tongue brings in a several tale,
And every tale condemns me for a villain. Shakespeare.

—Yes, truly, is he, and condemn'd upon't Shall Henry VIII.

Considered as a judge, it condemns where it ought to absolve, and pronounces abolition where it ought to condemn. Locke.

2. It has in before the punishment.

CON

The son of man shall be betrayed unto the scribes, and they shall condemn him to death. Matthew.

3. To censure; to blame; to declare criminal; contrary to approve.

Who then shall blame
His pester'd senses to recoil and start,
When all that is within him does condemn Himself for being there? Shakespeare.

The poet, who flourished in the scene, is condemned in the fable. Dryden.

He who was so unjust as to do his brother an injury, will scarce be so just as to condemn himself for it. Locke.

They who approve my conduct in this particular, are much more numerous than those who condemn it. Shakespeare.

4. To fine.

And the king of Egypt put him down at Jerusaleim, and condemn'd the land in an hundred talents of silver. 2 Chron.

The maid becomes a youth; no more delay. Your vows, but look, and confidents pay. Johnson.

3. Without appearance of doubt; without suspecting any failure or delinquency; positively; dogmatically.

Many men that all know what they themselves most confidently boast. Johnson.

It is strange how the ancients took up expectations upon credit, and yet did build great matters upon them. The observation of some of the best of them, delivered confidence, by that a vessel filled with sties will receive the like quantity of water as it had been empty; this is utterly untrue. Bacon.

Every fool may believe, and pronounce confidence, but wise men will conclude him by. Johnson.

- CONFIDENTNESS, n. f. [from confident.] Favourable opinion of one's own power; assurance.

CONFIGURATION, n. f. [configuration, French.]

1. The form of the various parts of any thing, as they are adapted to each other.

The different effects of fire and water, which we call heat and cold, result from the different configuration and agitation of their particles. Johnson.

CON

No other account can be given of the different animal secretions, than the different configuration and action of the solid parts. Arbutnot.

There is no pluck value concerned in shaping them, but the configurations of the particles whereof they consist. Woodward.

2. The face of the horoscope, according to the aspects of the planets toward each other at any time.

To CONFIGURE v. a. [from figura, Lat.] To dispose into any form, by adaptation.

Mother earth brought forth legs, arms, and other members of the body, scattered and distinct at their full growth; which coming together, cementing, and so configuring themselves into human shape, made lusty men. Bentley.

CONFINE n. f. [from confinis, Lat.] It had formerly the accent on the last syllable.]

Common boundary; border; edge.

Here in these confines they have I luck'd

To watch the warring of mine enemies. Shaksp.

his subject by a rigorous definition.

2. To shut up; to imprison; to immure;

to restrain within certain limits.

I'll not over the threshold.

—Ty, you confine yourself most unreasonably:

come, you must go visit the good lady. Shaksp.

I had been

As broad and gen'l as the casing air;

But now I'm cabb'd, cribb'd, confind, bound in. Shakspare.

3. To restrain; to tie up to.

Children, permitted the freedom of both hands do oft times confine unto the left, and are not without great difficulty restrained from it. Bacon.

Make one man's fancies, or failings, confine laws to others, and convey them as such to their successors. Bacon.

Where honour or where conscience does not bind,

No other tie shall shackle me;

Slave to myself I will not be;

Nor shall my future actions be confind

By my own present mind. Cowley.

If the goat continue, I confine myself wholly to the milk diet. Temple.

He is to confine himself to the compass of numbers, and the slavery of rhyme. Dryden.

Our hidden foes,

Now joyful from their long confinement rose. Dryd.

The mind hates restraint and is apt to fancy itself under confinement when the light is pent

up. Addison.

As to the numbers who are under restraint,

people do not seem so much surpris'd at the con- finement of some, as the liberty of others. Addison.

CONFINER n. f. [from confine.]

1. A borderer; one that lives upon con-

finis; one that inhabits the extreme parts of a country.

The senate hath shut'd up the confiners. Shaksp.

Happy confiners you of other lands,

That shut your soil. Daniel's Civil War.

2. A near neighbour.

Though gladness and grief be opposite in nature, yet they are such neighbours and confiners,

in art, that the least touch of a pencil will translate a crying into a laughing face. Hutton.

3. One which touches upon two different regions.

The particles or confiners between plants and living creatures, are such as have no local motion; such as oysters. Bacon.

CONFINITY n. f. [from confinitas, Latin.]

Nearness; neighbourhood; contiguity.

To CONFIRM v. a. [from confirmo, Latin.]

1. To put past doubt by new evidence.

The testimony of Christ was confirm'd in you.

So was his will

Pronounc'd among the gods, and by an oath,

Which shook heav'n's whole circumference, con- firm'd. Milton.

Whilst all the stars that round her burn,

And all the planets in their turn,

Confirm the tidings as they roll,

And spread the truth from pole to pole. Addison.

christian, by imposition of hands.

Those which are thus confirm'd, are thereby supposed to be fit for admittance to the sacrament.

Hammond's Fundamentals.

CONFIRMABLE adj. [from confirm.]

Capable of incontestible evidence.

It may receive a spurious inmate, as it con-

firmable by many examples. Bacon.

CONFIRMATION n. f. [from confirm.]

1. The act of establishing any thing or person; settlement; establishment.

Embrace and love this man.—

—With brother's love I do it.—

—And let heav'n

Witness how dear I hold this confirmation! Shaksp.

2. Evidence by which any thing is ascertained; additional proof.

A false report hath

Honour'd with confirmation your great judgment.

Shakspare.

The sea-captains answered, that they would perform his command; and, in confirmation thereof, promised not to do any thing which be-seemed not valiant men. Krolles' Hist.

3. Proof; convincing testimony.

Wanting frequent confirmation in a matter to confirmable, their affirmation carried but slow persuasion. Bacon.

The arguments brought by Christ for the con- firmation of his doctrine, were in themselves sufficient. South.

4. An ecclesiastical rite.

What is prepared for in catechising, is, in the next place, performed by confirmation; a most profitable piece of the church, transcribed from the practice of the apostles, which consists in two parts: the child's undertaking, in his own name,

every part of the baptismal vow (having first approved himself to understand it), and to that purpose, that he may more solemnly enter this obligation, bringing some godfather with him,

not now (as in baptism) as his procurator to understand for him, but as a witness to testify his entering this obligation. Hammond.

CONFIRMATOR n. f. [from confirmo, Latin.]

An atteller; he that puts a matter past doubt.

There wants herein the definitive con-

the difficulty. Lecky's Party.

CONFIRMER n. f. [from confirm.] One that confirms; one that produces evidence or strength; an atteller; an establisher.

Be these sad sighs confirmers of thy words?

Then speak again. Shakspare.

The oath of a lover is no stronger than the word of a knave; they are both the confirmers of false reckonings. Shakspare.

CONFISCABLE adj. [from confiscatio.]

liable to forfeiture.

To CONFISCATE v. a. [from confiscare, confiscare, v. e. in publicum adducere;

from ffius, which originally signifieth

a hamper, pannier, basket, or freil; but metonymically the emperor's treasure, because it was anciently kept in such hampers. Cicero.] To transfer private property to the prince or publick, by way of penalty for an offence.

I was dyed that he should be smother'd, and his whole office confiscate and seized, and his houses pulled down. Bacon.

Whence with the sugar by earth,

Belong to Ceres, who is sister to Vulcan,

By their own words confiscate to him. Dryden.

CONFISCATE adj. [from the verb.]

Transferred to the publick, as forfeit.

The recent in Shakspare is on the first syllable.

Thy lines and goods

Are, by the laws of Venice, confiscate

Unto the state of Venice. Shakspare.

Heir proud rebellion aims,
Dew alter him the third part of heaven's sons,
Cato's Tagast the Highest. Milton's Par. Lost

3. To influence by magic; to affect by enchantment; to charm.

What black magician conjures up this herd,
To stop devoted charitable deeds? Shakespeare
What is he, whose guile
Bear such an emphasis? whose phrase of sorrow
Conjures the wandering stars, and makes them stand
Like wonder-wounded hearers. Shakespeare

I thought their own fears, whose black arts Hath raised up those turbulent spirits, would force them to conjure them down again. King's Charter
You have conjur'd up passions that exist no where else but on old ruins, and have made our passions and virtues visible. Addison

4. It is to be observed, that when this word is used for summon or conspire, its accent is on the last syllable, con-jure; when for charm, on the first, con-jure.

TO CONJURE. v. n. To practise charms or enchantments; to enchant.

My invocation is honest and fair; and in his mistress's name I conjure only but to raise up him.
Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet

Out of my door, you witch! you hag, you baggage, you peevish, you runaway! Out, out, out! I'll conjure you, I'll fortuitously you!
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor

TO CONNECT. v. a. [connecto, Latin.]

1. To join; to link; to unite; to conjoin; to fasten together.

The corpuscles that constitute the quicksilver will be connected to one another, that instead of a fluid body, they will appear in the form of a red powder. Boyle

2. To unite by intervention, as a cement.

The natural order of the connecting ideas must direct the syllogisms, and a man must see the connection of each intermediate idea with those that it connects, before he can use it in a full aim. Locke

3. To join in a just series of thought, or regular construction of language: as, the author connects his reasons well.

TO CONNECT. v. n. To cohere; to have just relation to things precedent and subsequent. This is seldom used but in conversation.

CONNECTIVELY. a. v. [from connect.] In conjunction; in union; jointly; conjunctly; conjunctly.

consensus of the consensus of the consensus of the

consensus of the consensus of the consensus of the

Ye comets, scourge the bad revolting stars
That have conspired unto Henry's death. Shaksp.
In this we consent unto you, if ye will be as we
be. Greaves
What in sleep thou shalt alior to dream,
Waking thou never wilt consent to do. Mil.
Their num'rous th'under would awake
Dull earth, which does with heav'n consent
To all they write. Hall.

CONSENTANEOUS. adj. [consentaneus, Lat.]
Agreeable to; consistent with.

In the picture of Abraham smothering his son, Isaac is defended a little boy, who consents tame to the circumstance of the fact. Pope
It will cost no pains to bring the truth to light, nor to be patient at being very much and contentedly to every man's opinion.

CONSENTANEOUSLY. adv. [consentaneus, Lat.]
Agreeably; consistently;
suitably.

Peace is the first law we give to the world;
Only to himself, the rest we give to others, to be a law from every place of his wishes, where he is not to be a law.

CONSENTANEOUSNESS. n. f. [consentaneus, Lat.]
Agreement; confidence.

CONSENTIENT. adj. [consentient, Lat.]
Agreeing; united in opinion; not differ-and practice of the universal church.

CONSEQUENCE. n. f. [consequent,
Latia.]

1. That which follows from any cause or principle.

2. Event; effect of a cause.

All mortal things which reason would not
Shall be better than we know,
The day thou shalt see, thou shalt die. Mil.

3. Proposition collected from the agreement of other previous propositions;
deduction; conclusion.

It is no good consequence, that reason aims at our being happy, therefore it forbids all voluntary sufferings. Pope

4. The last proposition of a syllogism: as, what is commanded by our Saviour is our duty; prayer is commanded, consequently prayer is our duty.

Can I begin for things right?
No, majors from min'ors right;
O, both in friendly comfort join'd,
The consequence jumps false behind. Pope

5. Concatenation of causes and effects; consecution.

Sorrow being the natural and direct effect of sin, that which first brought sin into the world, must,
by necessary consequence, bring in sorrow too. South

I felt
That I must after thee, with this thy son;
Such fatal consequence unites us three. Milton

6. That which produces consequences; influence; tendency.

Affected without any colour of scripture-proof, it is of very ill consequence to the superfluity of good life. Hammond

This satisfaction or satisfaction, consequent upon a man's acting suitably or unsuitably to conscience, is a principle not easily to be worn out. South

CONSEQUENT. n. f.

1. Consequence; that which follows from previous propositions by rational deduc-tion.

It did not follow that they, being not the people of God, are not going to be followed? This consequent was good, if only the custom of the people of God is to be followed. Hester

2. Effect; that which follows an acting cause.

They were all paid; and they were all governed, which is always a consequent of all payment. Darius on Herod

He could be a prince yet dormant in the same place, and effects yet uniform. South

CONSEQUENTIAL. adj. [consequent, Lat.]

1. Produced by the necessary concatenation of effects to causes.

We sometimes wrangle, when we should declare.

A consequence of which freedom draws:
A bad effect, but from a noble cause. Pope

2. Having the consequences justly connected with the premises; conclusive.

Though the kind of arguments may seem different, very much in the consideration of them, they are all equally conclusive and consequent to the same end. Hall's Greek and Latin

CONSEQUENTIALLY. adv. [consequent,
Latia.]

1. With just deduction of consequences; with right connexion of ideas.

Nobody writes a book without meaning something, though he may not have the faculty of writing consequentially, and expressing his meaning. Addison's Whig Examiner

2. By consequence; not immediately; eventually.

This relation is so necessary, that God himself cannot discharge a rational creature from it, although consequentially, indeed he may do so, by the annihilation of such creatures. South

3. In a regular series.

Were a man a king in his dreams, and a beggar awake, and dream a consequentially, and in continued broken schemes, would he be in really a king or a beggar? Addison

CONSEQUENTIALNESS. n. f. [consequen-

Hobbes.

Utes, not thought upon before, be reasonable causes of retreating, that which other considerations did procure to be initiated.

Hobbes.

8. [In law.]

Consideration is the material cause of a contract, without which no contract bindeth. It is either expressed, as if a man bargain to give twenty shillings for a horse; or implied, as when a man takes a horse to ride, and taking, hath meat and lodging for himself and his horse, without bargaining with the host, his charge is not the horse, but the horse in my hand.

Cowell.

CONSIDERER. n. f. [from confider.] A man of reflection; a thinker.

A vain apprehension of wit for an impious jest, or of reason for a deep considerer.

Government of the Tongue.

CONSIDERING. [This is a kind of conjunction: it had been more grammatically ally written considered; vis, French; but considering is always used.] If allowance be made for.

It is not possible to act otherwise, considering the weakness of our nature. Spectator

Moses hath left of the primitive earth, is to this from nature. Hobbes.

CONSONANT. n. f. [consonans, Latin.]
A letter which cannot be sounded, or but imperfectly, by itself.

In all vowels the passage of the mouth is open and free, without any appulse of an organ of speech to another; but in all consonants there is an appulse of the organs, sometimes (it you abstract the consonants from the vowels) wholly precluding all sound, and in all of them, more or less checking and detouring it. Dr. Keil.

He considered these as they had a greater mixture of vowels or consonants, and accordingly employed them as the verse required a greater smoothness. Pope's Essay on Criticism.

CONSTABLE. n. f. [comes stabuli, as it is supposed.]

1. Lord high constable is an ancient officer of the crown. The function of the constable of England consisted in the care of the common peace of the land in deeds of arms, and in matters of war.

To the court of the constable and marshal belonged the cognizance of contracts, deeds of arms without the realm, and combats and blazonry of arms within it. The first constable of England was created by the Conqueror, and the office continued hereditary till the thirteenth of Henry VIII. when it was laid aside, as being too powerful as to become troublesome to the king. From these mighty magistrates are derived the inferior constables of hundreds and franchises; two of whom were ordained, in the thirteenth of Edward I. to be chosen in every hundred, for the conservation of the peace, and view of armour. These are now called high constables; because continuance of time, and increase both of people and offences, have occasioned others in every town of inferior authority, called petty constables. Besides these, we have constables denominated from particular places; as, constable of the Tower, of Dover Castle, of the Castle of Carnarvon: but these are properly castellani, or governors of castles. Cowell's Chambers.

When I came hither, I was lord high constable,
And duke of Buckingham; now poor Edward
I am. Shakespeare.

The knave constable, had set me 'th' stocks,
'th' common stocks, for a witch. Shakespeare.

The constable being a sober man, and an enemy to sedition, went to observe what they did. Cheriden.

2. To overrun the CONSTABLE. [perhaps from constabile, Fr. the settled, firm, and stated account.] To spend more than what a man knows himself to be worth: a low phrase.

CON

CON

I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written. John.
Recently instructed I shall hence depart,
Greatly in peace of thought, and have my fill
Of knowledge what this vessel can contain. Milton.

What thy stores contain bring forth, and pour Abundance. Milton.

2. To comprehend; to comprise.

What form'd fair in all the world, seem'd now
Mean, or in her fann'd up, in her contain'd. Milton.

The earth,
Though in comparison of heav'n so small,
Nor glistering, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun, that bren shines. Milton.

3. To comprise, as a writing.

Wherefore alio it is contained in the scripture. Peter.

4. To refrain; to withhold; to keep within bounds.

All men should be contained in duty ever after, without the terror of warlike forces. Spenser on Ireland.

Their king's person contains the unruly people from evil occasions. Spenser.

I tell you, Sir,
If you should smile, he grows impatient.—
—Fear not, my lord, we can contain ourselves. Shakespeare.

TO CONTAIN. v. n. To live in continence.

I felt the ardour of my passion increase, till I could no longer contain. Arbutnot and Pope.

CONTAINABLE. adj. [from contain.] Possible to be contained.

The air, containable within the cavity of the cotipile, amounted to eleven grains. Boyle.

TO CONTAMINATE. v. a. [contamino, Latin.] To defile; to pollute; to corrupt by base mixture.

Shall we now

Contaminate our fingers with base bribes? Shak.

A base pander holds the chamber-door,
Whild by a slave, no gentler than a dog,
His fairest daughter is contaminated. Shakespeare.

Do it not with poison; frangle her a her bed.
Even in the bed she hath contaminated. Shak.

I quickly shed

Some of his bastard blood, and in disgrace

Bespoke him thus: contaminated, base,

And mid-begotten blood I spill of thine. Shak.

Though it be necessitated, by its relation to self, to a terrestrial converse; yet 'tis, like the sun, without contamination of its beams. Glenn.

He that lies with another man's wife, propagates children in another's family for him to keep, and contaminates the honour thereof as much as in him lies. Alfife's Paragon.

CONTAMINATION. n. f. [from contaminare.] Pollution; defilement.

CONTAMINATED. adj. [contaminatus, Lat.] Violated; polluted.

TO CONTEMN. v. a. [contemno, Lat.] To despise; to scorn; to slight; to disregard; to neglect; to defy.

It was neither in contempt nor pride that I did not bow. Ephes.

The shame of being miserable,

Exposes men to scorn and base contempt,

Even from their nearest friends. Devotion.

There is no action, in the behaviour of one man towards another, of which human nature is more impatient than of contempt; it being as undervaluing of a man, upon a belief of his uselessness and inability, and a spiteful endeavour to engage the rest of the world in the same slight esteem of him. South.

His friend smil'd scornful, and with proud contempt

Rejects as idle what his fellow dreamt. Dryden.

Nothing, says Longinus, can be great, no contempt of which is great. Addison.

COPY-BOOK. n. f. [copy and book.] A book in which copies are written for learners to imitate.

COPY-HOLD. n. f. [copy and hold.] A tenure, for which the tenant hath nothing to show but the copy of the rolls made by the steward of his lord's court:

for the steward, as he enrolls other things done in the lord's court, so he registers such tenants as are admitted to the court, to any parcel of land or tennement belonging to the manor; and the transcript of this is called the court roll, the copy of which the tenant takes from him, and keeps as his only evidence.

Copy-hold is called a base tenure, because it holds at the will of the lord, yet not simple, but according to the custom of the manor: so that if a copy-holder break not the custom of the manor, and thereby forfeit his tenure, he cannot be turned out at the lord's pleasure. These customs of manors vary, in one point or other, almost in every manor. Some copy-holds are feeble, and some certain, that which is feeble, the lord rates at what fine or income he pleases, when the tenant is admitted into it, that which is certain, is a kind of inheritance, and called in many places customary; because the tenant dying, and the hold being void, the next of blood paying the customary fine, as two shillings for an acre, or so, cannot be denied his admission. Some copy-holders have, by custom, the wood growing upon their own land, which by law they could not have. Some hold by the verge in ancient demesne: and though they hold by copy, yet are they, in account, a kind of freeholder; for, if such a one commit felony, the king hath annum, diem, and ransum, as in case of freehold. Some others hold by common tenure, called mere copy-hold; and they committing felony, their land descends to the lord of the manor. Cowell.

If a customary tenant die, the widow shall have what the law calls her free bench in all his copy-hold lands. Adams.

COPY-HOLDER. n. f. [from copy-hold.] One that is possessed of land in copy-hold.

TO COPY. v. a. [from the noun.]

CORE. n. f. [cœur, Fr. cor, Lat.]

1. The heart.
 Give me that man
 That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him
 In my heart's core; ay, in my heart of heart.
Shakespeare's Hamlet

2. The inner part of any thing.
 In the core of the square he raised a tower of a furlong high. Raleigh's History of the World.
 Dig out the cores below the surface. Mortimer.
 They wistful eat,
 Through buds and bark, into the blacken'd core.
Thomson.

3. The inner part of a fruit which contains the kernels.
 It is reported that trees watered perpetually with warm water, will make a fruit with little or no core or stone. Bacon.

4. The matter contained in a boil or fore.
 Lance the sore,
 And cut the head; for, till the core be found,
 The secret vice is fed, and gathers round.
Dryden's Virgil.

5. It is used by Bacon for a body or collection. [from corps, Fr. pronounced core.]
 He was more doubtful of the raising of forces to shift the rebels, than of the resistance itself;
 for that he was in a core of people whose affections he suspected. Bacon's Henry VII.

CORIA'CEOUS. adj. [coriaceus, Lat.]

1. Consisting of leather.
 2. Of a substance resembling leather.
 A stronger propelling motion of the blood must occasion greater friction and loss of liquid parts, and from thence perhaps spissitude and coriaceous excretions. Arbucnot on Aliments.

CORIA'NDER. n. f. [coriandrum, Latin.]

A plant.
 The species are, 1. Greater coriander. 2. Smaller reticulated coriander. The first is cultivated for the seeds, which are used in medicine: the second sort is seldom found. Miller.
 Israel called the name thereof mannâ; and it was, like coriander seeds, white. Exodus.

CORINTH. n. f. [from the city of that name in Greece.] A small fruit, commonly called currant.

Now will the corinths, now the rats supply Delicious draughts. Philips.
 The chief riches of Zant consist in corinths, which the inhabitants have in great quantities.
Broom.

CORINTHIAN Order.

This is generally reckoned the fourth, but by some the fifth, of the five orders of architecture; and is the most noble, rich, and delicate of them all. Vitruvius ascribes it to Callimachus, a Corinthian sculptor, who is said to have taken the hint by passing by the tomb of a young lady, over which a basket with some of her playthings had been placed by her nurse, and covered with a tile; the whole having been placed over a root of acanthus. As it sprung up, the branches encompassed the basket; but arriving at the tile, bent downwards under the corners of it, forming a kind of volute. Hence Callimachus imitated the basket by the vase of his capital, the tile in the abacus, and the leaves in the volute. Vulsalpandus imagines the Corinthian capital to have taken its origin from an order in the temple of Solomon, whose leaves were those of the palm-tree. The capital is adorned with two rows of leaves, between which little stalks arise, of which the sixteen volutes are formed, which support the abacus. Harris.

Behind these figures are large columns of the Corinthian order, adorned with fruit and flowers. Dryden.

CORK. n. f. [cortex, Lat. korck, Dutch.

Illic dies, anno redeunte, festus
Corticem aspidium pice dimovet
Amphora sumum libere instituit
Consule Tullo. Hor.]

1. A glandiferous tree, in all respects like the ilex, excepting the bark, which, in the cork tree, is thick, spongy, and soft. Miller.

The cork tree grows near the Pyrenean hills, and in several parts of Italy, and the north of New England. Mortimer.

2. The bark of the cork tree used for stopples, or burnt into Spanish black. It is taken off without injury to the tree.

3. A piece of cork cut for the stopple of a bottle or barrel.

I pry'thee take the cork out of my mouth, that I may drink thy tidings. Shakespeare.
 Be sure, nay very sure, thy cork be good;
 Then future ages shall of Peggy tell,
 That nymph that brew'd and bottled ale so well.
King.

Nor stop, for one bad cork, his butler's pay.
Popr.

CORKIN-PIN. n. f. A pin of the largest size.

When you put a clean pillow-case on your lady's pillow, be sure to tatten it well with three corkin-pins, that it may not fall out in the night. Stout.

COR'KY. adj. [from cork.] Consisting of cork; resembling cork.

Bind tail his corks arms. Shakespeare.

COR'MORANT. n. f. [cormorant, Fr. from corvus marinus, Latin.]

1. A bird that preys upon fish. It is nearly of the bigness of a capon, with a wry bill and broad feet, black on his body, but greenish about his wings. He is eminently greedy and rapacious.

Let tame, that all hunt after in their lives,
 Live register'd upon our brazen tombs;
 When, spite of cormorant devouring time,
 Th' endeavour of this pickt breath may buy
 That honour which shall 'bute his scythe's keen edge. Shakespeare.

Those called birds of prey, as the eagle, hawk, puttock, and cormorant. Pearson.

Thence up he flew, and on the tree of life
 Sat like a cormorant. Milton's Par. Lst.

Nor far from thence is seen a lake, the haunt
 Of coots, and of the fishing cormorant. Dryden.

2. A glutton.

CORN. n. f. [corn, Sax. korn, Germ. It is found in all the Teutonic dialects; as, in an old Runick rhyme, Hagel er kalldasur corna.

 Hail is the coldest grain.]

1. The seeds which grow in ears, not in pods; such as are made into bread.

Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone. John.

The people cry you mock'd them; and, of late,
 When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd. Shakespeare.

2. Grain yet unreaped, standing in the field upon its stalk.

All the idle weeds that grow
 In our sustaining corn. Shakespeare.

Landing his men, he burnt the corn all thereabouts, which was now almost ripe. Knales.

Still a murmur runs

Along the soft inclining fields of corn. Thomson.

3. Grain in the ear, yet unthrashed.

Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a thock of corn cometh in his season. Job.

4. An excrescence on the feet, hard and painful; probably so called from its form, though by some supposed to be denominated from its cornaceous or horny substance.

Ladies, that have your feet Unplagu'd with corns, we'll have a bout with you. Shakespeare.

The man that makes his toe
 What he his heart should make,

Shall of a corn cry woe,
 And turn his sleep to woe. Shakespeare.

Even in men, aches and hurts and corns do en-grieve either towards rain or towards frost. Bacon's Natural History.

The hardest part of the corn is usually in the middle, thrusting itself in a nail; whence it has the Latin appellation of clavis. Wifeman.

He first that useful secret did explain,
 That pricking corns foretold the gath'ring rain.
Gay's Poet.

It looks as there were regular accumulations and gatherings of humours, growing perhaps in some people as corns. Arbucnot.

Thus Lamb, renowned for cutting corns,
 An offer'd fee from Radetich scorned. Swift.

TO CORN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To salt; to sprinkle with salt. The word is so used, as Skinner observes, by the old Saxons.

2. To granulate.

CORN-FIELD. n. f. A field where corn is growing.

It was a lover and his lass,
 That o'er the green corn-field did pass. Shaks.

You may soon enjoy the gallant fights of armies, encampments, and standards waving over your brother's corn-fields. Popr.

CORN-FLAG. n. f. [corn and flag.] A plant. Miller enumerates eleven species of this plant, some with red flowers, and some with white.

CORN-FLOOR. n. f. The floor where corn is stored.

T thou hast loved a reward upon every corn-floor.
Hojra.

CORN-FLOWER. n. f. [from corn and flower.]

There be certain corn-flowers, which come seldom or never in other places, unless they be set, but only amongst corn; as the bluebottle, a kind of yellow maygold, wild poppy, and tur-mitory. Bacon's Natural History.

Corn-flowers are of many sorts: some of them
 flower in June and July, and others in August.
 The seeds should be sown in March; they require a good soil. Mortimer.

CORN-LAND. n. f. [corn and land.] Land appropriated to the production of grain.

Pastures and meadows are of such advantage to husbandry, that many prefer them to corn lands. Mortimer's Husbandry.

There's nothing I have done yet, o' my conscience.

Defences a corner. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

It is better to dwell in a corner of a house top, than with a railing woman and in a wide house.

I am persuaded that none of these things are hidden from him, for this thing was not done in a corner.

Adverse abatement, in every corner of the mind, has been absolutely reduced under his unerring subjection.

These vices, that lurk in the secret corners of the mind.

The extremities; the utmost limit; thus every corner is the whole or every part.

My father's house was upon, once a day, Bidd'it stand, all corner of the earth.

It is right to be not corporeal yet at a corporeal place, and if it have any corporeal part, then, of all others it is the most corporeal.

CORPORALLY adv. [from corporalis]

Bodily.

The sun is corporally composed with light and heat.

CORPORATE adj. [from corpus, Lat.]

1. United in a body or community; enabled to act in legal processes as an individual.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he over-run all Munition and Courage, getting and utterly subverting all corporate towns that were not firmly walled.

The bodies of Aths being not at this time a corporate assembly, therefore the interest of the commons was usually turned against particular persons.

2. General; united.

They utter in a joint and corporate voice,

That now they are at full.

CORPORATENESS n. f. [from corporatus]

The state of a body corporate; a community.

CORPORATION n. f. [from corpus, Lat.]

A body politick, authorized by the king's charter to have a common seal, one head officer or more, and members, able, by their common consent, to grant or receive, in law, any thing within the compass of their charter: even as one man may do by law all things, that by law he is not forbidden; and bindeth the successors, as a single man binds his executor or heir.

Of angels we are not to consider only what they are, and do, in regard to their own being; but that also which concern to them, as they are taken into a kind of corporation amongst themselves, and of the city with man.

Of it is we had time fast steps in our law,
We had time fast steps in our law,
To set it to me, the corporeal draw,

And the corporeal corporeal make.

CORPORALITY n. f. [from corpus, Lat.]

The state of being imbedded.

CORPORAL adj. [corporeus, Lat.]

1. Having a body; material; not spiritual.

The corporeal is of three kinds attribute,
Though none really, to his composition,
That corporeal substances could and Speed about spiritual.

Having surveyed the image of God in the soul,
we are not to omit those characters that God imprinted upon the body, as much as a spiritual substance could be pictured upon a corporeal.

God being supposed to be a pure spirit, cannot be the object of any corporeal sense.

The courts is built which they later deiced,
And thou form by corporeal person freed.

To try corporeal and material eye
On the young man, or new engender'd fly.

2. It is used by Swift inaccurately for corporeal.

I am not in a condition to make a true step even on a misbus Downs; and I declare, that a corporeal false step is worse than a pointed one.

CORPORALITY n. f. [from corporeus, Lat.]

Materiality; the quality of being imbedded; the state of having a body; bodiliness.

Since philosophy affirmeth, that we are middle substances between the soul and the body, they must admit of some corporeity, which supposeth weight or gravity.

It is the laying of divine Plato, that man is nature's no man, dividing between the upper sphere of immaterial intellects, and the lower of corporeity.

The one attributed corporeity to God, and the other shape and figure.

CORPORIFICATION n. f. [from corporatus]

The act of giving body or palpability.

To corporeity v. d. [from corpus, Lat.]

To imbody; to inspitulate into body.

Not used.

A certain quantity of substance, extracted out of it, is imbedded in the part of the world corporeity.

CORPUS n. f. [corps, Fr. corpus, Lat.]

1. A body.

That is a dead body

I had his body in a very clean,

To see his body in a very clean,

Of a very and very clean.

2. A body, in contempt.

Though I am a body, all too little seems
To find this many, it is a very unkind-bound corporeity.

He looks as man was made with face erect,
That reason's little corporeity, and seems without He's not a spirit.

3. A carcass; a dead body; a corpse.

Not a friend

Greet my poor corporeity, where my bones shall be drawn.

There was the murder'd corp in covert hid,
And violent death in thousand shapes display'd.
De Witt's Fables.
See where the corp of thy dead son appears.

The corp was laid out upon the floor by the emperor's command: he then bid every one light his flambeau, and stand about the dead body.
Shakspeare's Hamlet.

4. The body, in opposition to the soul.
God number'd ancient here to be.
His corp of flesh, and th' immortal soul gives.
De Witt.

5. A body of forces.

CORPULENT. } n. f. [corpulentia, Lat.]
CORPULENCY. }

1. Bulkiness of body; fleshiness; fulness of flesh.

To wit a cumbersome unworldliness,
And loadenous corpulence, my love had grown.
De Witt.

It is but one species of corpulence, for there may be bulk without fatness, from the great quantity of muscular flesh, the case of robust people.
Shakspeare's Hamlet.

2. Spillitude; grossness of matter.

To be corpulent is fleshiness, or a relaxation of the parts, the result of a too copious use of the water, or a great quantity of food.
Ray.

CORPULENT. adj. [corpulentus, Latin.] Fleshy; bulky; having great bodily bulk.

We say it is a fleshy stile, when there is much periphrasis, and circuit of words; and when,
with more than enough, it grows fat and corpulent.
Ben Jonson's Disputes.

Excess of nourishment is hurtful; for it mak-eth the child corpulent, and growing in breadth rather than in height.
Boerhaave.

CORPUSCULE. n. f. [corpusculum, Lat.]

A small body; a particle of matter; an atom; a little fragment.

It will add much to our satisfaction, if those corpuscles can be discovered with microscopes.
Newton.

Who knows what are the figures of the little corpuscles that compose and distinguish different bodies?
Watts's Logic.

CORPUSCULAR. } adj. [from cor- CORPUSCULARIAN. } pulum, Latin.]

Relating to bodies; comprising bodies.
It is the distinguishing epithet of that philosophy, which attempts the rational isolation of all physical appearances by the action of one body upon another.

As to material philosophy, I do not expect to see any principles proposed, more comprehensive and intelligible than the corpuscularian or mechanical.
Boerhaave.

This may be said, that the mechanical or atomian talk, in most things, more intelligible than the periphrastical.
Boerhaave.

The mechanical or corpuscular philosophy, though peradventure the most useful, as well as the best in the world, had been dead for many ages in contempt and oblivion.
Boerhaave.

CORRACLE. See CORKICLE.

To CORRA'DE. v. a. [corrado, Latin.] To rub off; to wear away by frequent rubbing; to scrape together.

CORRADIATION. n. f. [con and radius, Latin.] A conjunction of rays in one point.

The image of a labourer's worketh not but by a cone of direct rays, or lightness, whereof the basis is in the object, and the vertex point in the eye: so as there is a corradation, and conjunction of beams.
Bacon's Natural History.

To CORRE'CT. v. a. [corrigo, correctum, Latin.]

1. To punish; to chastise; to discipline.

Sad accidents, and a state of affliction, is a school of virtue; it corrects levity, and interrupts
the confidence of flattery.
Taylor.

After he has once been corrected for a lye, you must be sure never after to pardon it in him.
Lea's Education.

Children being to be reformed by the parents only in vicious things, a look or nod only ought to correct them when they do amiss.
Locke.

2. To amend; to take away faults in writings, life, or things.

This is a defect in the hill make of some men's minds, which can scarce ever be corrected afterwards, either by learning or age.
Burnet.

Correcting Nature, from what actually she is in individuals, to what she ought to be, and what she was intended.
Dryden.

I am, however, it seemed me, I correctly because it was as pleasant to me to correct as to write.
Pope's Preface.

The mind may cool, and be at leisure to attend to its domestic concern: to consider what habit wants to be corrected, and what inclination to be subdued.
Rogers.

3. To obviate the qualities of one ingredient by another, or by any method of preparation.

O happy mixture! wherein things contrary do so qualify and correct, the one the danger of the other's excess, that neither boldness can make us pretume, as long as we are kept under with the sense of our own wretchedness; nor, while we trust in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, be able to tyrannize over us.
Hooker.

As, in his brutal gout or Ptole,
The only thing that can be done,
Is to correct your drink and diet,
And keep the sword for in quiet.
Pope.

In cases of acidity, water is the proper drink in quality of relaxing may be corrected by boiling it with some animal subtilities; as ivory or hathorn.
Achard's on Aliments.

4. To remark faults.

CORRE'CT. adj. [correctus, Latin.] Revised or finished with exactness; free from faults.

What verse can do, he has perform'd in prose,
Which he presumes the most correct of his.
De Witt.

Always use the most correct editions: various readings will be only to obliterate where the sense is correct.
Foster.

CORRECTIONS. n. f. [from correct.]

1. Punishment; discipline; chastisement; penalty.

With trous, pupil-like,
Take thy correction mildly, kiss the rod.
Shakspeare.

That harsh enrag'd him on to offer strokes,
As he is striking, holds his infant up,
And bangs of steel correct him as he aims.
Shakspeare.

We are all but children here under the great master of the universe, and he is pleased, by hopes and fears, by merits and corrections, to instruct us in virtue.
Hutchins.

One day, a great great lady to her servants, to whom she gave good counsel, but too gentle corrections.
A. Luthorst.

2. Alteration to a better state; the act of taking away faults; amendment.

Another poet, in another age, may take the same liberty with my writings; if, at least, they live long enough to deserve correction.
Dryden.

3. That which is substituted in the place of any thing wrong.

Corrections or improvements should be adjoined, by way of note or commentary, in their proper places.
Watts.

4. Reprehension; animadversion.

They proceed with judgment and ingenuity, establishing their assertions not only with great solidity, but submitting them also unto the cor- rection of future discovery.
Brown.

5. Abatement of noxious qualities, by the addition of something contrary.

To make ambitious, wholesome, do not take
A dram of country's dulness: do not add Corrections, but as chymists purge the bad.
De Witt.

CORRECTIONER. n. f. [from correction.]
One that has been in the house of correction; a jailbird. This seems to be the meaning in Shakspeare.

I will have you countly twined for this, you blue-bottle rogue! you bloody lambed correctioner.
Shakspeare's Hamlet.

CORRECTIVE. adj. [from correct.] Having the power to alter or obviate any bad qualities.

Mucilages are pectoral, corrective of the inflammation.
Shakspeare.

CORRECTIVE. n. f.

1. That which has the power of altering or obviating any thing amiss.

The hair, wool, feathers, and scales, which all animals of prey do swallow, are a feeding and necessary corrective, to prevent their greediness from hindering themselves with too much of a food.
Key on the Digest.

Humanly speaking, and according to the method of the world, and the corrective of it, imposed by art and discipline, it is difficult for an ill principle to have its course, and to nature regard its blow.
Shakspeare's Hamlet.

2. Limitation; restriction.

There seems to be such an influence in the argument which the human soul exercises in relation to the body, that, with its corrective and exceptions, may give some kind of explanation or adumbration of the fact.
De Witt.

CORRECTLY. adv. [from correct.] Accurately; exactly; without faults.

There are ladies, without knowing it, who and partizans, advice and preparation, and speak as properly and as correctly as most gentlemen who have been bred up in the study methods of grammar schools.
De Witt.

Such facts as are rather ethereal, show,
Correctly added, and regularly.
De Witt.

CORRECTNESS. n. f. [from correct.] Accuracy; exactness; freedom from faults.

To much latitude of expression is added by adding to the position, that there is means nothing but a correctness of without any considerable fault, or beauties.
De Witt.

The softness of the flesh, the elasticity of shape, size, and posture, and the correctness delight, in this nature, are inseparable.
De Witt.

Those pieces have never before been printed from the true copies, or with any tolerable degree of correctness.
De Witt.

CORRECTOR. n. f. [from correct.]

1. He that amends, or alters, by punishment or animadversion.

How many does zeal urge rather to do justice on some sins, than to forbear all sin! How many rather to be correctors than practitioners of religion.
Spauld's Sermons.

With all his faults he sets up to be a universal reformer and corrector of authors, and a remover of grievances.
Swift.

2. He that revises any thing to free it from faults: as, the corrector of the press, that amends the errors committed in printing.

I remember a person, who, by his style and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a hedge press in Little Britain, proceeding gradually to an author.
Swift.

3. In medicine.

Such an ingredient in a composition, as guards against or abates the force of another; as the corrector of a medicine.
De Witt.

frivola falsis prevent the grievous vollications of reñuous purges, by dividing their particles, and preventing their adhesion to the intestinal membranes; and as spices and carminative seeds assist the operation of some catharticks, by dissipating wind. In making a medicine, such a thing is called a corrector, which destroys or diminishes a quality that could not otherwise be dispensed with; thus turpentes are correctors of quicksilver, by destroying its fluidity, and making it capable of mixture.

Co'RRULATE. v. n. [from con and relatus, Lat.] To have a reciprocal relation, as father and son.

Co'RRULATE. n. f. One that stands in the opposite relation.

It is one thing for a father to cease to be a father by cutting off his son; and another for him to cease to be so, by the death of his son: in this relation is at an end, for want of a correlate.

Co'RRULATIVE. adj. [con and relativus, Latin.] Having a reciprocal relation, so that the existence of one in a particular state depends upon the existence of another.

Father and son, husband and wife, and such other correlative terms, seem nearly to belong one to another.

Giving is a relative action, and so requires a correlative to animate it: giving, on one part, transfers property, unless there be an acceptance on the other.

Co'RRULATIVENESS. n. f. [from correlativus.] The state of being correlative.

Co'RRUPTION. n. f. [corripio, corruptum, Latin.] Objection; chiding; reprehension; reproof.

If we must be talking of other people's faults, let it not be to defame, but to amend them, by converting our derision into admonition and fraternal corruption. Government of the Tongue

To CORRESPOND. v. n. [con and respondeo, Latin.]

1. To suit; to answer; to be proportionate; to be adequate to; to be adapted to; to fit.

The days, if one be compared with another successively throughout the year, are found not to be equal, and will not justly correspond with any artificial or mechanical equal measures of time.

Words being but empty sound, any future than they are signs of our ideas, we cannot but assent to them, as they correspond to those ideas we have, but no farther than that.

2. To keep up commerce with another by alternate letters.

CORRESPONDENCE. n. f. [from correspondency.] responsal.

1. Relation; reciprocal adaptation of one thing to another.

Between the law of their heavenly operations, and the actions of men in this our state of mortality, such correspondence there is as maketh it expedient to know in some sort the one, for the other's more perfect direction.

Whatever we fancy, things keep their course; and their habitudes, correspondences, and relations, keep the same to one another.

2. Intercourse; reciprocal intelligence.

I had discovered those unlawful correspondences they had used, and engagements they had made to embroil my kingdom.

Sure the villains hold a correspondence With the enemy, and thus they would betray us.

I take it, the that carries up the train,
Is that old noble lady, the duchess of Norfolk — Is, and all the rest are countresses. Shakspeare.
It is the peculiar happiness of the countress of Abingdon to have been to truly loved by you while she was living, and to gracefully honour after she was dead. Dryden.

CO'UNTING-HOUSE. n. f. [count and house.]

The room appropriated by traders to their books and accounts.

Men in trade seldom think of laying out money upon land, till their profit has brought them in more than their trade can well employ; and their idle bags cumbering their counting-houses, put them upon emptying them. Locke.

CO'UNTLESS. adj. [from count.] Innumerable; without number; not to be reckoned.

Ay, tear for tear, and loving kiss for kiss,
Thy brother Marcus renders on thy lips:
O were the sum of these that I should pay Countless and infinite, yet would I pay them. Shakspeare.

But oh, her mind, that occurs which includes Legions of mischief, countless multitudes
Of former curses. Donne.

By one countless sum of woes oppress'd,
Hoary with cares, and ignorant of rest,
We find the vital springs relax'd and worn;
Thus, thro' the round of age, to childhood we return. Prior.

I see, I cried, his woes, a countless train;
I see his friends o'erwhelm'd beneath the main. Pope's Odyssey.

COUNTRY. n. f. [contré, Fr. contrata, low Latin; supposed to be contracted from contrerata.]

CO'UNTRY. adj.

1. Rustick; rural; villatick.

Cannot a country wench know, that, having received a shilling from one that owes her three, and a shilling also from another that owes her three, the remaining debts in each of their hands are equal? Locke.

He comes no nearer to a positive, clear idea of a positive infinity, than the country fellow had of the water which was yet to pass the channel of the river where he stood. Locke.

Talk but with country people, or young people, and you shall find that the not ones they apply this name to, are in odd, that nobody can imagine they were taught by a rational man. Locke.

A country gentleman, learning Latin in the university, removes thence to his mansion-house. Locke.

The low mechanics of a country town do form what outdo him. Locke.

I never meant any other, than that Mr. T. ut should confine himself to country dances. Spratt.

Come, will'st thou to our country seat repair,
The native home of innocence and love. Marston.

2. Of an interest opposite to that of courts: as, the country party.
3. Peculiar to a region or people.

She bringing the cruel tyrant to scorn, spoke in her country's language. Macabers

4. Rude; ignorant; untaught.
- We make a country man do what, whom we will not allow to speak but by the rules of grammar. Dryden's Dufresnoy

CO'UNTRYMAN. n. f. [from country and man.]

1. One born in the same country, or tract of ground. Locke.

See, who comes here?

My countryman; but yet I know him not. Stich

Home, great bard! to fate ordain'd, arise;

And, bold as were his countrymen in fight,

Snatch'd their fair actions from degrading prose,

And set their battles in eternal light. Pope

The British soldiers act with greater vigour under the conduct of one whom they do not consider only as their leader, but as their countryman.

Adrian's War

2. A rustic; one that inhabits the rural parts.

All that have business to the court, and all countrymen coming up to the city, leave their ways to the country. Grant

3. A farmer; a husbandman.

A countryman took a bear to his corn.

L'Estrange

CO'UNTY. n. f. [comité, Fr. comitatus, Latin.]

1. A shire; a circuit or portion of the realm, into which the whole land is divided, for the administration of justice.

Every county is governed by a yearly officer, called a sheriff, who puts in execution all the commands and judgments of the king's courts.

Of these counties four are termed county-palatines,

as that of Lancaster, Chester, Durham, and Ely. A county-palatine is a jurisdiction of so high a nature, that the chief governors of these, by special charter from the king, sent out ad writs in their own names, and did all things touching justice as absolutely as the prince himself, only acknowledging him their superior and sovereign. But this power has, by a statute in

Henry VIII. his time, been much abridged.

There are likewise counties corporate, which are certain cities or a certain borough upon which our princes have thought good to bestow extraordinary liberties. Of these London is one,

York another, the city of Chester a third, and Canterbury a fourth. And to these may be added many more; as the county of the town of Kingston upon Hull, the county of the town of Haverfordwest, and the county of Litchfield.

County is, in another signification, used for the county-court.

Discharge your powers unto their several counties, As we will ours Stich's are

He caught his death the last county gallant,

whom he would not see justice done to a poor widow-woman, and her fatherless children.

Adrian's Spectator

2. An earldom.

3. [comité.] A count; a lord. Obsolete.

The gallant, young, and noble gentleman,

The county bar. Shakespeare

He made Hugh Lupus county palatine of Chester, and gave that earldom to him and his heirs, to hold the same county ad gladium.

Antiquities of England and Wales

COUPEE. n. f. [French.] A motion in dancing, when one leg is a little bent and suspended from the ground, and with the other a motion is made forwards. Chambers

CO'UPLE. n. f. [couple, French; copula, Latin.]

1. A chain or tie that holds dogs together.

I'll keep my stable-hand when

I lodge my wife; I'll go in couple with her,

Than when I feel and see no further trust her.

Shakespeare

It is in some fort with friends as it is with dogs in couple: they should be of the same fire and humour. L'Estrange

2. Two; a brace.

He was taken up by a couple of shepherds, and by them brought to life again. Sidney

A schoolmaster, who shall teach my son and you, I will provide; yea, though the three do

cost me a couple of hundred pounds. Asham

A piece of crystal inclosed a couple of drops, which looked like water when they were shaken, though perhaps they are nothing but bubbles of

air. Adrian's Lady

By adding one to one, we have the complex idea of a couple. Locke

3. A male and his female.

So shall all the couple thrive,

Ever true in loving be. Shakespeare

Oh! alas!

I lost a couple, that 'twixt heaven and earth

Might thus have stood, begetting wonder, as

You gracious couple do. Shakespeare

I have read of a feigned commonwealth, where the married couple are permitted, before they contract, to see one another naked. Bacon

He said: the cruel couple join their tears,

And then invoke the gods with pious prayers.

Dryden

All succeeding generations of men are the progeny of one primitive couple. Bentley

TO CO'UPLE. v. a. [copula, Latin.]

1. To chain together.

Huntman, I charge thee, tender well my hounds;

And couple Clowder with the deep-mouth'd

Beach. Shakespeare

2. To join one to another.

What greater bliss have the heavens in store,

To couple coming hearts with fortune's part. Sidney

And whereso'er we went, like Juno's twins,

Still we went couple and inseparable. Stich

Put the taches into the boxes, and couple the tent together that it may be one. Exodus

They behold your chaste conversation coupled with fear. Peter

Their concerns were so coupled, that if nature had not set their religions would have made them brothers. Scotch

That man makes a mean figure in the eyes of reason, who is mending syllables and coupling

rhymes, when he should be mending his own soul, and securing his own immortality. Pope

3. To marry; to wed; to join in wedlock.

I shall rejoice to see you coupled, as may be fit both for your honour and your satisfaction.

Sidney

I am just going to assist with the archbishop,

in degrading a parson who couple all our beggars,

by which I shall make one happy man. Swift

TO CO'UPLE. v. n. To join in embraces.

Waters in Africa being rare, divers sorts of beasts come from several parts to drink; and in being refreshed, fall to couple, and many times with several kinds. Bacon

Thou, with thy lusty crew,

Call wanton eyes on the daughters of men,

And couple with them, and begot a race. Miln

That great variety of brutes in Africa, is by reason of the meeting together of humours of several species, at water, and the promiscuous couplings of males and females of several species.

Hale's Origin of Mankind

After this alliance,

Let tygers march with hinds, and wolves with sheep,

And every creature couple with his foe. Dryden

COUPLE-BEGGAR. n. f. [couple and beg- gar.] One that makes it his business to marry beggars to each other.

No couple appear in the land

But join'd such numbers hand in hand. Swift

CO'UPLET. n. f. [French.]

1. Two verses; a pair of rhymes.

Then would they call away their pipes, and holding hand in hand, dance by the only candle

of their voices, which they would use in singing

some short couplets, whereto the one half beginning, the other half should answer. Sidney

Then at the last, an only couplet fraught

With some unmeaning thing they call a thought;

A needless Alexandrine ends the tongue;

That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow

length along. Pope

In Pope I cannot read a line,

But with a sigh I wish it mine;

When he can in one couplet fix

More sense than I can do in six,

It gives me such a jealous fit,

I cry, put him and his wit!

Swift

2. A pair, as of doves.

Anon, as patient as the female dove,

Ere that her golden couplets are disclosed,

His silence will sit drooping. Shakespeare

CO'URAGE. n. f. [courage, Fr. from cor, Lat.] Bravery; active fortitude;

spirit of enterprise.

The king-becoming graces,

Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,

I have no reliſh of them. Shakespeare

Their discipline

Now mingled with their courage. Shakespeare

Hope aims their courage; from their souls

they throw

Their darts with double force, and drive the foe.

Dryden

Courage, that grows from constitution, very often takes a man when he has occasion for it, and when it is only a kind of manner in the fact, it breaks out on all occasions, without judgment or discretion. That courage which rises from the sense of our duty, and from the fear of offending him that made us, acts always in an uniform manner, and according to the dictates of right reason. Adrian's Guardian

Nothing but the want of common courage was the cause of their misfortune. Swift

COURAGEOUS. adj. [from courage.]

1. Brave; daring; bold; enterprising; adventurous; hardy; stout.

And he that is courageous among the mighty,

Shall see away naked in that day. Job

Let us imitate the courageous example of St.

Paul, who chose then to magnify his office with his men conspired to resist it. Adrian

2. It is used ludicrously by Shakespeare for outrageous.

He is very courageous mad, about his throwing into the water. Shakespeare

COURA'GEOUSLY. adv. [from courageous.]

Bravely; stoutly; boldly.

The king the next day presented him battle upon the plain, the fields there being open and champaign, the east courageously came down, and fought battle with him. Bacon

COURA'GEOUSNESS. n. f. [from courage- ous.] Bravery; boldness; spirit; courage.

No man bearing of the manliness and the courageousness

that they had to fight for their country, durst not try the matter by the sword. Mal-

COURA'NT.

COURA'NT. } n. f. [courante, Fr.] See

COURA'NT.

1. A nimble dance.

I'll live a man the better, while I have a tooth in my head: why, he is able to hold her a round. Shakespeare

2. Any thing that runs quick, as a paper of news.

TO COUR. v. n. [courer, French.] To bend; to bow; to stoop in supplication. Not in use.

In the lateness of these purty times,
Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg,
Yea coub and woo, for leave to do it good.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

COURIER. n. f. [courier, Fr.] A messenger sent in haste; an express; a runner.

I met a courier, one mine ancient friend.

Shakespeare's Timon.

This thing the wary baffle well perceiving, by speedy couriers advertised Solymán of the enemy's purpose, requesting him with all speed to join with his army to Tauris.

COURSE. n. f. [course, Fr. curfus, Lat.]

1. Race; career.

And some the arms with sinewy force,
And some with swiftness in the course.

2. Passage from place to place; progress.

To this may be referred, the course of a river.

And when we had finished our course from Tyre, we came to Ptolemais.

A light, by which the Argive Squadron steers
Their silent course to Ilium's well known shore.

3. Tilt; act of running in the lists.

But this but knight was cooled with a fall, which, at the third course, he received of Pha-lontus.

4. Ground on which a race is run.

5. Track or line in which a ship sails, or any motion is performed.

6. Sail; means by which the course is performed.

To the courses we have devised fludding sails, spirit-sails, and top sails.

7. Progress from one gradation to another;
process.

When the state of the controversy is plainly determined, it must not be altered by another disputant in the course of the disputation.

8. Order of succession: as, every one in his course.

If any man speak in an unknown tongue, let he be by two, or at the most by three, and that by course, and let one interpret.

9. Stated and orderly method, or manner.

If the live long,
And in the end meet the old course of death,
Women will all turn monsters.

The duke cannot deny the course of law.

Shakespeare.

It God, by his revealed declaration, first gave right to any man, he, that will claim by that title, must have the same positive grant of God for his succession; for, if it has not directed the course of its descent and conveyance, no body can succeed to this title of the first ruler.

10. Series of successive and methodical procedure.

The glands did resolve during her course of physick, and she continueth very well to this day.

Hicman's Surgery.

11. The elements of an art exhibited and explained, in a methodical series.
Hence our courses of philosophy, anatomy, chymistry, and mathematicks.

Chambers.

12. Conduct; manner of proceeding.

Gratus, perceiving the danger he was in, began to doubt with himself what course were best for him to take.

That worthy deputy finding nothing but a common misery, took the best course he possibly could to establish a commonwealth in Ireland.

Darwin on Ireland.

He placed commissioners there, who governed it only in a course of discretion, part martial, part civil.

Darwin on Ireland.

VOL. I.

Give willingly what I can take by force;

And know, obedience is your safest course.

But if a right course be taken with children,
there will not be so much need of common rewards and punishments.

Locke.

'Tis time we should decree

What course to take.

The senate observing how, in all contentions, they were forced to yield to the tribunes and people thought it their wisest course to give way alto to time.

Swift.

13. Method of life; train of actions.

A woman of so working a mind, and so vehement spirits, as it was happy she took a good course; for otherwise it would have been terrible.

Sidney.

His addition was to courses vain;

His companions unletter'd, rude, and shallow;

His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports.

Shakespeare's Henry v.

As the dropy-man, the more he drinks, the drier he is, and the more he still desires to drink:
even so a sinner, the more he sins, the soper is he to sin, and more desirous to keep still a course in wickedness.

Perkins.

Men will say,

That beauteous Emma vagrant courses took,
Her father's house and civil life forsook.

Prior.

14. Natural bent; uncontroll'd will.

It is best to leave nature to her course, who is the sovereign physician in most diseases.

Temple.

So every servant took his course,

And, bad at first, they all grew worse.

Prior.

15. Catamenia.

The stoppage of women's courses, if not suddenly looked to, sets them undoubtedly into a consumption, dropy, or some other dangerous distaste.

Harris on Consumption.

16. Orderly structure.

The tongue defileth the whole body, and fetteth on fire the course of nature.

Jamies.

17. [In architecture.] A continued range of stones, level or of the same height, throughout the whole length of the building, and not interrupted by any aperture.

Harris.

18. Series of consequences.

19. Number of dishes set on at once upon the table.

Worthy sir, thou bleed'st:

Thy exercise hath been too violent

For a second course of fight.

Shakespeare.

Then with a second course the tables had,

And with full chargers offer to the god.

Dryden.

You are not to wash your hands till after you have sent up your second course.

Swift.

So quick returns each flying course, you'd swear

Saacho's dead doctor and his wand were there.

Pope.

20. Regularity; settled rule.

21. Empty form.

Men talk as if they believed in God, but they live as if they thought there was none; their vows and promises are no more than words of course.

Leffing.

22. Of course. By consequence.

With a mind untroubled by doctors and commentators of any sect, whose reasonings, interpretations, and language, which I have been used to, will of course make all chime that way, and make another, and perhaps the genuine meaning of the author, seem harsh, strained, and unconformable to me.

Locke.

23. Of course. By settled rule.

Scale is of course annex'd to wealth and
power;

No mule is proof against a golden shower.

Gray.

Neither shall I be so far wanting to myself, as not to desire a patent, granted of course to all useful projectors.

Swift.

To COURSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To hunt; to pursue.

The lag round tears

Could one another down his innocent nose

In piteous chafe.

The king is hunting the deer: I am courting myself.

Shakespeare.

Where's the shame of Cav'dor?

We could him at the heels, and had a purple

To be his pursuon.

Shakespeare.

2. To pursue with dogs that hunt in view.

It would be tried also in flying of hawks, or in chasing of a deer, or harts with greyhounds.

Baron's Natural History.

I am continually starting hares for you to course: we were certainly cut out for one another: for my temper quits an amour just where thine takes it up.

Congreve.

3. To put to speed; to force to run.

When they have an appetite

To venery, let them not drink nor eat,

And course them off, and tire them in the heat.

May's F.

To COURSE. v. n. To run; to rove about.

Swift as quicksilver it courses through

The natural gates and alleys of the body.

The blood, before cold and settled, left the liver white and pale, which is the badge of puffanimity and cowardice; but the thermis warms it, and makes it course from the inwards to the puts extreme.

Shakespeare.

She did so course o'er my exteriours, with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye did seem to scorch me up like a burning glass.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Ten brace and more of greyhounds, in my fair,

And tall as flags, ran loose and could around his chair.

Dryden.

All at once

Relapsing quick, as quickly re-ascend

And next and thwart, extinguish'd and renew'd.

All thus courting in a maze of light.

Thomson.

CO'URSER. n. f. [from course; courser,

French.]

1. A swift horse; a war horse: a word not used in prose.

He proudly pricketh on his courser strong,

And Atin ay him picks with spurs of flame and wrong.

Spenser.

Then to his absent guest the king decreed:

A pair of coursers, born of heavenly breed:

Who from their nostrils breath'd ethereal fire,

Whom Circe stole from her celestial fire.

Dryden.

The impatient courser pants in every vein,

And, pawing, seems to beat the distant plain;

Hills, vales, and floods appear already cross'd,

And, ere he starts, a thousand steps are lost.

Pope.

2. One who pursues the sport of courting hares.

A leash is a leathern thong, by which a falconer holds his hawk, or a couler leads his greyhound.

Hamlyn.

COURT. n. f. [cour, Fr. koert, Dutch;

curtis, low Latin.]

1. The place where the prince resides;

the palace.

Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires.

Men so diso'dly, so debauch'd and bold,

That this our court, so fill'd with their manners,

Shew like a riotous and epicurism and lust

Make it more like a tavern, or a bawdy,

Than a great palace.

Shakespeare.

It shall be an habitation of dragons, and a court for owls.

Shakespeare.

His exactness, that every man should have his due, was such, that you would think he had never seen a court: the politeness with which this justice was administered, would convince you he never had lived out of one.

Pope.

A suppliant to your royal court I come.

Pope.

2. The hall or chamber where justice is administered.

Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this present question in the court?
Shakespeare.

St. Paul being brought into the highest court in Athens, to give an account of the doctrine he had preached concerning Jesus and the resurrection, took occasion to impart on those magistrates a true doctrine.
Athenians.

3. Open space before a house.

You must have, before you come to the front, three square a green grass plain, with a wall about it; a fine old coat of the time, but more garnished with some turrets, or other embellishments, upon the walls, and a round tower, to square with the front, not to be built but related with a naked wall.
Ben Jonson.

Suppose it were the king's bed chamber, yet the meanest man in the kingdom must come and dispute his business, rather than in the king's court yard (which is finer than I can see) for fear the king should be cleared, and the fences broken.
Ben Jonson.

4. A small opening enclosed with houses, and paved with broad stones, distinguished from a street.

5. Persons who compose the retinue of a prince.

Their william was to be long by esteemed, for some of them were always employed to follow the prince at their king's court, to them.
Ben Jonson.

6. Persons who are assembled for the administration of justice.

7. Any jurisdiction, military, civil, or ecclesiastical.

If any noise or soldier you perceive Near to the wall by some apparent sign
Let us have knowledge at the court of guard.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The archbishop
Of Canterbury, accompanied with other Learned and reverend fathers of his order, Held into a court at Dunstons.
Shakespeare.

I have at last met with the proceeding of the court before, tell us that beholds.
Shakespeare.

8. The art of pleasing; the art of ministration; civility; flattery.

Him the prince with gentle court did regard.
Spenser.

Hast thou been never bafe? Dd love not's beard
Thy frailty virtue to betray thy friend?
Flatter me, make thy court, and say it did;
Kings in a crowd would have their voices hid.
Dryden's Aureng.

Some sort of people, placing a great part of their happiness in strong drink, are always forward to make court to my young master, by offering them which they love best themselves.
Locke.

I have been considering why poets have such all faculties in making their court, and they are allowed to be the greatest and best of all flatterers: the defect is, that they have only in part or in writing.
Swift's G. G.

9. It is often used in composition in most of its senses.

To COURT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To woo; to solicit a woman to marriage.

Follow a third wife, if they say;
Seem to fly it, it will pursue;
So court a mistress, she denies you;
Let her alone she will court you.
Ben Jonson.

Find with her love, and with ambition led,
The neighbouring prince and his royal bed.
Dryden's Aureng.

Alas! Sempronius, wouldst thou talk of love
To Merope, whilst her father's wife is in danger?
Thou mightst as well start the pale trembling
vestal,
While she beholds the holy flame expiring
Addison's Cato.

Ev'n now, when silent scorn is all they gain,
A thousand court you, though they court in vain.
Pope.

2. To solicit; to seek.

Their own ease and satisfaction would quickly teach children to court commendation, and avoid doing what they found condemned.
Locke.

3. To flatter; to endeavour to please.

COURT-CHAPLAIN. n. f. [court and chaplain.] One who attends the king to celebrate the holy offices.
The maids of honour have been fully convinced by a famous court-chaplain.
Swift.

COURT-DAY. n. f. [court and day.] Day on which justice is solemnly administered.
The judge took time to deliberate, and the next morning he spoke.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

COURT-DRESSER. n. f. [court and dresser.] One that dresses the court, or persons of rank; a flatterer.
There are many ways of flattery; such arts of giving colours, appearances, and resemblances, by which the truth is fancy.
Locke.

COURT-FAVOUR. n. f. Favours or benefits followed by princes.
We put with the blessings of both worlds for pleasures, court favours, and commendations; and at last, when we have sold ourselves to our lusts, we grow sick of our bargain.
Locke.

COURT-HAND. n. f. [court and hand.] The hand or manner of writing used in records and judicial proceedings.
He can make obliging, and write court-hand.
Swift's Pope.

COURT-LADY. n. f. [court and lady.] A lady conversant or employed in court.
The same lady, long continued, is as intolerable to them, as the appearing long in the same court or fashion is to a court-lady.
Locke.

COURTEOUS. adj. [courtous, French.] Elegant of manners; polite; well-bred; full of acts of respect.
He hath deserved worthily of his country; and his merit is not by such easy degrees, as those who have been supple and courtous to the people.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

They are one who are courtous, civil, and obliging, but within a trill time they are supercilious, sharp, troublesome, fierce, and exacting.
Swift.

COURTEOUSLY. adv. [from courtous.] Respectfully; civilly; complaisantly.
He thought them to be gentlemen of much more worth than their habits betrayed, yet he let them courtously pass.
Hutton.

When Christ was upon earth, he was not only easy of access, he did not only courtously receive all that addressed themselves to him, but also did not disdain himself to travel up and down the country.
Calamy's Sermons.

Alcibiades, being prevailed upon by the glory of his name, entertained him courtously.
Brace.

COURTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from courtous.] Civility; complaisance.

COURTESAN. } n. f. [cortisana, low COURTIZAN. } Lat.] A woman of the town; a prostitute; a strumpet.
'Tis a brave night to cool a courtesan.
Shakespeare.

With them there are no Jews, no dissolute houses, no courtesans, nor any thing of that kind; nay they wonder, with detestation, at you in Europe, which permit such things.
Bacon.

The Cornithian is a column lasciviously decked like a courtesan.
Hutton.

Charisus, the brother of Sappho, in love with Rhodope the courtesan, spent his whole estate upon her.
Albion.

COURTESY. n. f. [courtoise, Fr. cortesia, Italian.]

Ev'n now, when silent scorn is all they gain,
A thousand court you, though they court in vain.
Pope.

1. Elegance of manners; civility; complaisance.

Shy, you are very welcome to our house.
It must appear in other ways than words,
Therefore I thank this breathing courtesy.
Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Who have seen his estate, his hospitality, his courtesy to strangers.
Ben Jonson.

He, who was compounded of all the virtues of affability and courtesy towards all kind of people, brought himself to a habit of modesty, and even of rudeness, towards the queen.
Cicero.

Courtesy is sooner found in lowly shades
With smoky rafters, than in tap'dry halls,
And courts of princes, whence it is not nim'd.
Milton.

So gentle of condition was he known,
That through the court his courtesy was blown.
Dryden's L. A.

2. An act of civility or respect.
You told me such a day; on that time
You can me dig; and for these courtesies,
I'll lend you thus much money.
Shakespeare.

Repay you there, while I to the hand of the Return, and force then fought courtesy.
Shakespeare.

When I was at Exeter,
The mayor in courtesy shew'd me the castle.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

Sound all the lute instruments of war,
And by that music let us all embrace;
For heaven to earth some of us never shall
A second time do such a courtesy.
Shakespeare.

Other states, absurdly, cannot be easily cured for not playing for the first blow, or not accepting; Polyphemus's courtesy, to be led that shall be eaten up.
Ben Jonson.

3. The reverence made by women.
Some courtesy only, force to a courtesy held,
Would I much rather than Cornelia wed;
If, supercilious, haughty, proud, and vain,
She brought her father's triumph in her train.
Dryden's Aureng.

The poor creature was as full of courtesy if I had been her godmother, she would have endeavoured to make her look something Christian-like.
Ben Jonson's Every Man in His Humour.

4. A tenure, not of right, but by the favour of others; as, to hold upon courtesy.

5. COURTESY of England. A tenure by which, if a man marry an inheritrix, that is, a woman seized of land, and getteth a child of her, that comes alive into the world, though both the child and his wife die forthwith, yet, if he were in possession, shall he keep the land during his life, and is called tenant per legem Angliæ, or by the courtesy of England.
Cowell.
